Here are the stencils we made for painting the Foxy the Pirate mask. While made primarily for kids, an adult can also wear it as shown in the second image 😊 ... so perhaps it is made for an older adolescent size. "Fits many"? 😊

This might be one of our coolest achievements, being old school Star Wars fans who grew up playing with the original toys in the 80's. To have an action figure, with a screen shot on the card, of helmets that were built in our little shop is pretty neat.

Subject was an extra in the movie The Lone Ranger. Armie Hammer (The Lone Ranger) did all of his own whistling (calling for Silver, the horse). When I first heard the whistles on set I figured they had a professional whistler because it was really loud. Damned if Armie wasn't doing the whistling himself. — with Lor Dresden.

Subject posted that he had an EKG after experiencing chest pain, shortness of breath, and tingling fingers. The doctor thought it may be due to a hernia or the esophagus. gots me some cool EKG hickeys ☺ No worries. All is ... "fine". But we had a scary moment yesterday. You wouldn't know it from my loopy expression lol. Man whatever they gave me made me sleep better than ever when we got home. Yesterday my chest began to hurt worse than ever before. It was super tight. I could hardly breathe or move. My finger tips were tingly. These are all symptoms (though much much worse) that I have had from my ulcers and a hiatal hernia, going back to 1995. I hadn't felt the "chest" pain since 1996 until this past summer. Since we don't have sensory nerves inside to pinpoint pain, it is tough to know what it is. So, it is likely that hernia / esophagus related. I will have to follow up with the Doc. In the last photo, Kaylee (our 5 year old) was diagnosing me and drawing what was wrong and she started drawing foods to show mommy, that I am not allowed to eat anymore including spicy pepper

Thanks everyone. ❤️ Thankfully it wasn't too serious. It was a bit scary for a moment and perhaps a good eye opener. Better to go to the E.R. when in doubt I guess 😊 . Todd Jones, thanks.

It was a bit scary. I was preparing for the worst and telling Kathy and Kaylee how much I love them though I could barely talk. I had Kaylee ride on my lap in the wheelchair going into the E.R. to be sure and give her one last ride / hug just in case. Thankfully it wasn't that bad. Though I still need to figure out what is going on. My chest (or hernia whatever) is still hurting pretty bad today.

Subject's business's most recent post, a picture of a helmet they created on an action figure container. To have an action figure, with a screen shot on the card, of helmets that were built in our little shop is pretty neat.

Subject posted some of the props that his business created for Rogue One. Would there be interest in these leftover pieces of plastic that we used for props in the film "Rogue One"? I had the crew save them when we did the job in 2015 because, well ... I have pack rat tendencies, especially if I think something can be used or has some sort of value (monetary, emotional, etc.) We have been debating throwing these pieces away lately but after talking to a couple of collectors, we are now wondering if people might want them. I can see how a shadow box type of display could be made to look interesting. There are probably a total of 4 stacks like the stack in this photo so I would count them all and label each piece with a number (example: 1/100 black or something) and what costume piece would have been cut out of the square. The first white square looks to have been used for a Rebel Fleet Trooper dome and comm box. The chin cup is still in the sheet (probably had a blemish). There are black, white, and clear sheets measuring 24" x 24". It would definitely have to be worth my time to sort, process, perhaps make a COA, etc. Comment here with your thoughts and we will go from there.

That is an exorbitant raise. Has he had any major improvements done on the property that warrants such a raise? I think that you need to negotiate something better with him. Most increases are smaller percentage...is he wanting to sell the property to make a larger profit? I don't know what the legalities are with rental properties and what protections there are in place for tenants, but I'd look into it if I were you.

If your lease is not up looks like the landlord might be breaking your lease.

If you do not sue shop around for a new apartment.

Have you considered a new double wide or pre owned?

$525 is thievery.

The average rent in Denver area is $1,800 I saw on tv news recently.

Subject posted about the accident he was in with his wife, Kathy, and their daughter, Kaylee. He said that they were hit by a car that turned in front of them. He notes that the other driver was cited. He wrote that they all had pain. He said that his sternum hurt and felt like he had whiplash. They were all transported to the hospital by ambulance for testing, and he was admitted overnight in the surgical unit. Our day didn't quite go as planned. We are "o.k.". I have a fractured sternum from hitting the steering wheel and some very bad whiplash pain... Yay. So, doing pretty much anything on my own has not been much of an option so far. My chest and neck/ back hurt like hell. But after 6 hours of E.R. attention and CT scans I am finally in a room. Just glad it wasn't worse for the three of us. Kathy does have pain. So does Kaylee. Kaylee seems excited to tell her friends she was in an accident. Typical 7 year old ☺. I am thankful Kathy has always been on top of the best safety standards when it comes to Kaylee and for her good quality high back booster seat. So, I get to enjoy the hospitality of the Fort Collins Hospital tonight (where Kaylee was in the NICU at birth). The accident was not my fault. The other driver got the citation. We were approaching the "Carpenter Rd" intersection on 287, going North. I was in the left-hand / West lane. I am always leery of that intersection, especially driving North as you approach it while going downhill in a 55 mph zone. There are always accidents there. Anyway, I am pretty sure I instinctively slow a little, around 50 to 55 mph through that spot because of my concerns there. When we were maybe 50 yards from the intersection there was a car sitting in the south bound turn lane (turning East, in front of us) and he started to turn out in front of us. In the moment I decided against chancing going to the left of him (in case he stopped) and because there were more cars in his turn lane behind him. So, while beginning to ride the breaks I aimed to the side of the stop light pole, crossing the righthand lane hoping to maybe skirt by him (hoping he would hit the breaks). He definitely did not hit the breaks. I honestly think he hit the gas (maybe on accident or to maybe try and beat us) so it was a very solid collision and he pushed us up onto the concrete at the light pole, spinning his car completely around. Upon "coming to" I first thought the car was on fire because of the smoke and smell from the airbags so I wanted Kathy to get Kaylee out asap .. which she wasted no time. The other car was up against my door so I couldn't get out that way. I tried crawling out the passenger side but the pain was too bad. I couldn't even lift myself up to get over the console. I just had to sit in there. Thankfully a bunch of witnesses rushed to our aid, including a doctor and they were all amazing. As soon as they could "drag" me out the passenger side I was loaded into an ambulance. Kathy and Kaylee had to wait for a 2nd ambulance. We got to see each other again after all our tests, close to 3 hours later. I kind of feel like we got lucky, with not hitting him head on and having him hit the side of the front quarter. If we had hit head on or if he had hit my door, Kaylee's door, or the rear end I kind of fear those scenarios may have been worse. Drive carefully everyone. We are all in very real danger every time we get out on the road. Have respect for the situation and the heavy steal objects flying by you at high speeds, piloted by the naturally flawed human species. Pay attention. Get off your devices, etc. Hug your loved ones. Make good decisions.

Subject posted about driving in the same area as the accident with his dad. He noted that a similar incident happened where the person making a left, turned out in front of them, nearly causing another accident. So my Dad was driving me today and as we were approaching the intersection where my family and I were T-boned on Sunday I was explaining to him how things transpired. There was a car sitting in the turn lane opposite from us (we had the green) and I used that car as an example for the guy who gunned it and t-boned us ... and damned if that F@$&er didn't hit the gas and cut across in front of us! My dad had slowed a tiny bit coming down the hill to the light, probably being apprehensive because of what happened to me so thankfully he was prepared and he had to slam on the breaks, screeching the tires. We were in the right lane this time and even though we stopped because of that guy (literally as the light turned yellow), the car next to us in the left lane blew through the intersection as it turned red. What the hell?!....□ That light (and most of the ones on that stretch) have a flashing yellow arrow. I honestly think that there are people who might be distracted or not in their right mind who see an "arrow" and subconsciously think "hey, I have an arrow so I can go", no matter the color.

So my Dad was driving me today and as we were approaching the intersection where my family and I were T-boned on Sunday I was explaining to him how things transpired.

There was a car sitting in the turn lane opposite from us (we had the green) and I used that car as an example for the guy who gunned it and t-boned us ... and damned if that F@$&er didn't hit the gas and cut across in front of us!

There is a corner I drive every day on my way home from work, where absolutely no one else, ever stops before doing a right-on-red.

I swear I'm gonna get rear-ended some day and they will claim it's my fault for stopping.

Regardless of where you stand - Self driving cars have already shown they would reduce traffic accidents by HUGE percentages.

The goal isn't zero before we implement it - otherwise we will NEVER implement it.

If zero plane crashes was the requirement before we could have commercial airlines, we wouldn't have any commercial airlines today... it's about risk.

Ken Vodehnal It might be, but clearly the danger is really tiny - how often do you get in to a car and not have an accident. Me personally? no less than 700 times a year, likely well over 1000 times a year. Most of us go many years without a direct incident.

If that wasn't the case, then the law would change, and we'd have fewer something to reduce the risks.

The red light violators are crazy lately and yellow flashing arrow means caution. I see people at every stoplight violating the signals. We need cameras at every stoplight and more police at every large intersection. It is scary even though that light turns green look both ways before proceeding into the intersection. Never trust a yellow arrow I think for some reason people think yellow arrow is the same as a green arrow. Be very careful Colorado is seeing a lot of people from out of state moving here I have noticed in the past two years that driving here has become more and more dangerous

Subject posted about his business designing and building a full-size Bantha from Star Wars. He notes that he had started planning in April for July of 2022. But their car accident and other issues added challenges to getting it done. Photo Drop #5 of 10 Stay tuned as we add more photos to this folder in the coming days. In April of 2022 we decided to pursue something that we have wanted to build since 2015. The idea of tackling a full size Star Wars creature has been the subject of many "what would we like to make next, to push ourselves and add more abilities?" conversations. When we were originally talking about it all those years ago, our friend Lor (who is basically our personal Bantha expert) of course wanted us to make a full size Bantha. We had circled around between a full size Jabba display, a full size Acklay, and a few other creature ideas but we always came back to the Bantha. With the popularity of the Disney Plus streaming Star Wars shows, starting with "The Mandalorian" having a full size Bantha puppet and then "The Book of Boba Fett" show using that puppet more and having Banthas throughout that show, that really made us want to dive into this creation. From the date we decided to tackle it, that gave us 10 weeks to start from scratch, tackle many processes that we had never done before, and get it ready to debut at Fan Expo Denver on July 1st, 2022. On top of that we were challenged with a bad car accident injuring FAC's owners and their daughter, the aftermath of that accident with vehicle replacement, physical therapy, all of them catching COVID, their beloved pet passing away, and a number of other challenges.

On top of that we were challenged with a bad car accident injuring FAC's owners and their daughter, the aftermath of that accident with vehicle replacement, physical therapy, all of them catching COVID, their beloved pet passing away, and a number of other challenges.

Somehow, with working on it all the way up until 1:30 a.m. the morning that we were supposed to leave a 5:00 a.m. to transport the puppet to the show ... we got it presentable. Setting it up at the show would be the first time we got to see all of the pieces together at one time and find out if it would all come together and look o.k. ... and it worked. The show was a huge success. The patrons absolutely LOVED it. We had a line probably 70 feet long most of the show. So many people thanked us with pure, sincere gratitude for having this display at the show.

Anthony Daniels (C-3PO actor) even came to look at our display at Fan Expo and seemed genuinely impressed and happy to see it and talk about it. He even shared a story with us from when George Lucas was getting prepared to film the desert scenes for "A New Hope". Anthony said that he asked George what they were going to do for the sand creatures that the sand people would ride. He recalls George saying something to the effect of "It will be an elephant". Anthony mentioned that he was surprised and curious about that answer, trying to imagine how an elephant would actually look in the film, but not necessarily questioning George. I would wager that George may have not really known yet himself what the creature would look like and like with many elements of that production, he was likely believing in his team and hoped somehow that it would work out.

"Bonnie L. Bantha". or "Bonnie the Bantha". That is what we decided to name "her". This goes back to when we were first discussing the idea with our friend Lor in 2015. We thought of Bonnie Burton at

"Bonnie L. Bantha". or "Bonnie the Bantha". That is what we decided to name "her". This goes back to when we were first discussing the idea with our friend Lor in 2015. We thought of Bonnie Burton at the time who worked at Lucasfilm and loved how the name "Bonnie" rolled off the tongue as well. That idea seemed to stick after all this time. Regarding the middle initial "L", that is for our friend Lor. Since COVID, he hasn't really been able to get out and about and unfortunately he was not able to come assist with the build. We decided to honor him by making the middle name be "Lor" aka "Bonnie L. Bantha".

Adding to his worries, his business is also running into difficulties. I managed to go about 6 months without a bad Gerd attack and then boom, two super painful, debilitating episodes within 3 days. I use organic Apple Cider Vinegar (with the Mother). Fill an 8oz glass with filtered water, add 1-2 tablespoons of ACV and sip. Acid reflux gone. It balances pH and alkaline within the body. And it's natural; zero side effects. I've also cured sinusitis and UTIs with ACV. Edit: eating a fresh apple also works well.

I've also added a probiotic first thing in the morning 30min before eating and it's worked wonders as well. Stonehenge Health is a great brand.

Thanks everyone for the concerns and thoughts. I really appreciate it! ❤️

J ForJay Kirkster, I have found that coconut water almost always helps to calm it down or prevent an attack if I feel one coming on. I also have to sit up straight and relax at the same time (just breathe). And the nice thing is I can find it at Walgreens, Kum & Go, etc.

With being diagnosed with severe Gerd for a while now it has taken a lot of research and experimentation on what works well for me. I didn't have the taste for apple cider vinegar and I didn't notice help from it at the time.

As for things to avoid, citric acid is one of the worst things and it is in so many things and so many raw fruits, followed by carbonation, caffeine (chocolate, soda, etc), grease, garlic, and fatty foods (milk, some yogurts, etc). I learned about milk the hard way early on. At the beginning I would drink milk thinking it would calm it down. Nope. The stomach has to create more acid to break it down.

The biggest problem for me is stress. Money stress is major. Currently our "new" replacement car after being T-boned has us in at about $13k right now in repairs and our Yukon also needs about $2500 in repairs. Business costs have gone up exorbitantly and we have more competition than ever before. Feeling down that we haven't landed more regular film related work for our bigger goals. Dealing with clients sometimes is awful. If I am around a toxic, loud, highly confrontational person I have to just walk away or put the phone down.

Anxiety and stress are my biggest enemies. My brain is out to get me 😊

Subject posted that their replacement car after their accident is costing them more money due to the engine not working. He wrote that it is costing them $22,500, including the cost of buying it and the repairs needed. He notes that they received $7000 from insurance, and his dad gave them $2500 to buy it, but now it is costing more than they bought it for. OMG, this life. We are currently into this car for $22,500 and we are now looking at another $900 repair because they used the old alternator when replacing the engine. This 2010 GMC Acadia was the car we found as our replacement after getting t-boned and losing the car that we had paid off. Insurance gave us $7k and my dad helped with the remaining $2500 to get this car. It 'was' a nice car for us, for a little while. And then when the engine went bad we figured it "should" be better to put money into the car that we know rather than gambling on another used car so we got a loan for $10k for the new engine, after having put $2500 into replacing the power steering pump. There have been about $500 in other repairs since replacing the engine ... and now another $900 for a freaking alternator. What the hell?!

Alexander J Larson

Their powertrains are not well proven and I have an impression GM management pushed R&D through a rush job which is why they this platform is infamous for powertrain failures and transmissions blowing up. To go into it, an automatic transmission is basically perhaps the most complicated mechanical system I can think of that exists. It's a hydrodynamic computer controlled turbine pump that has planetary gear systems attached to it. When you put it into D and drive, the TCU (Transmission Control Module) is trying to figure out when to open and close solenoids that flow into the set of fluid driven turbine vanes called the torque converter. And move the planetary gears around sun gears that does the auto shifting. The front turbine keeps the whole thing spinning like when you're stopped and you don't stall as the engine stays idling I think. Anyways actually getting that 800 piece clusterfuck of mechatronics engineering to work is probably more intensive than engineering a commercial jet turbine. Like it literally involves simulating it in software that runs off the math from good will hunting and multivariable fluid flux calculus. If you rush that kind of R&D and prototyping and testing. That powertrain will not work well or for long. Basically what happens when

I think you should dispute their decision to put in an old alternator, Cal. It may recoup some of your loss.

Such a strange sensation.

Jenny Shumaker Oof that doesn't sound fun. A similar thing happened to me once. One day I wore tight shoes for too long, and my big toe got numb in one foot. (Probably a pinched nerve or something). Took about a week and a half to get back to normal. 2y Like Reply

He may also have peripheral neuropathy in his foot that caused the numbness. A numb foot and a torn rotator cuff. 2 new additions to my collection. Why do I have to be into collecting things? ☺ My numb foot (well, 1/4 of it) ... Doc says I may just have peripheral neuropathy to add to my collection of health stuff. So that's fun. He does have me on a medication and upping my vitamin B intake. On top of that he thinks I tore the rotator cuff in my left shoulder in the car accident last April. He said it is common for the pain to show up months after an injury like that. It has been slowly getting worse since before Thanksgiving, actually when my physical therapist gave me an exercise that aggravated the pain and then changing that alternator definitely exacerbated it. I have been catching myself using my right arm to move my left arm, usually during the night. I am currently waiting to see if he and my physical therapist want to get some imaging. Well, the therapist wants it, to see what they are dealing with. I am just waiting on the doc to get back to me. Yay ☺

I'm sorry for your health pains, (no pun intended). I hear about people not getting better after going to a doctor many times and I just get so angry. I know there's a better way to go about this. Right now the insurance companies have total control over your treatment unless you are willing to pay for it yourself out of pocket. Big pharma has no desire to make you well. A well patient needs no medicine or expensive tests. Medication that more often than not gives you more adverse side effects than what it's prescribed for fixing. For years we have been hearing about these hidden cures being hidden from us by these greedy people that cost little or nothing to make us well and doing it naturally. I hope that day comes soon for you, Cal. You deserve it.

Stress of course kicked it off like usual. My evil brain. ☹ The past couple weeks have really been a stresser, worrying about the business and the crew / family. And then we watched an awkward movie yesterday that pushed it over the edge. ☹ . I should've turned it off. Pain is currently at a 4, the best it has been since 2:00 yesterday. I think I would consider trading this for the fractured sternum pain I had. I definitely don't wish this pain on anyone ... well ... there could be one or two ☹ I might need something for anxiety. ACV works well for me though it does take a bit of time depending on the severity of symptoms. I'm used to the taste now and don't mind. I also like that it's natural. I've heard that OTC products like Prilosec, TUMs, etc. should not be used on a regular basis.

He had to go for a surgery consultation to see if his gallbladder needs to be removed. He also commented that his daughter had a fever and he was told to stay away from her to avoid getting sick. So, while having the longest Gerd attack to date (3 days) my gall bladder decided to get backed up. Good old gallstones (cross that off the bucket list, yay ☺). It took the initial awful pain from the Gerd lightening up to a typical healing wound pain before I realized there was a separate pain underneath it. I got an ultrasound last night (while I was there for the MRI on my shoulder ☺). Blood work suggests that it needs to be removed so I have a consult with the doctors at the hospital tomorrow to decide whether to go into surgery right away or not. And... Kaylee has been running a 100° fever since 8:00 last night so Kathy is taking her to urgent care right now. My doctor was like "stay away from your daughter!" ☺ ... no kidding. Weee. Fun times. It took the initial awful pain from the Gerd lightening up to a typical healing wound pain before I realized there was a separate pain underneath it.

I got an ultrasound last night (while I was there for the MRI on my shoulder 😊). Blood work suggests that it needs to be removed so I have a consult with the doctors at the hospital tomorrow to decide whether to go into surgery right away or not.

And... Kaylee has been running a 100° fever since 8:00 last night so Kathy is taking her to urgent care right now. My doctor was like "stay away from your daughter!" 😊 ... no kidding.

Weee. Fun times. I just want to be able to eat again. I have lost 10 lbs so far this week. At least I am thirsty and drinking fluids is easy and satisfying. Though, no more ibuprofen for me before my appointment tomorrow.

Are these badges of honor for making it to this age or what?! Maybe there was something to the time when we humans didn't make it past our 30's 😊 lol...

Subject posted that he has been having terrible dreams that he is having difficulty waking up from. He thinks it may be related to his taking his anxiety meds and pain meds before bed. I have had the same nightmare / terror two nights in a row. Last night was insanely intense with Kathy literally having to pull me out of it ... like some Freddy Kruger shit. I will get to the dream in a moment (which... might be very entertaining) but first here is some backstory on me and my abilities with bad dreams. When I was much younger I gained the ability to recognize if I was dreaming. If it was a bad dream I could either ride it out or choose to wake myself up. As the years have gone by, this has changed and Kathy has had to live through this craziness. It has become more and more difficult. Originally I could just wake up. Then I just had to shake myself. About 15 years ago I got to a point where I had to scream in my dream and that would wake me up but on the outside I was making a horrible high pitched squeal that would scare the crap out of Kathy... and she lived with this for years

I have had the same nightmare / terror two nights in a row. Last night was insanely intense with Kathy literally having to pull me out of it ... like some Freddy Kruger shit. I will get to the dream in a moment (which... might be very entertaining) but first here is some backstory on me and my abilities with bad dreams.

When I was much younger I gained the ability to recognize if I was dreaming. If it was a bad dream I could either ride it out or choose to wake myself up. As the years have gone by, this has changed and Kathy has had to live through this craziness. It has become more and more difficult.

Originally I could just wake up. Then I just had to shake myself. About 15 years ago I got to a point where I had to scream in my dream and that would wake me up but on the outside I was making a horibble high pitched squeal that would scare the crap out of Kathy... and she lived with this for years.

Later and more recently I have to make this heavy snorting / snoring noise in my dream which mostly comes through the same on the outside, which I can hear as a snore and it wakes me up. Again, scaring the crap out of Kathy if it is an intense one.

As it has gotten more difficult to wake up on my own, she has found that she can just touch me and I will wake up ... usually ... but last night was different.

So, my latest dream (from Friday and Saturday night) is 2 layers / dreams deep. In the 2nd dream layer I am in some sort of prison camp with these creatures. Most of them look like real animals / pets such as cats and dogs but there are other bizarre creatures too, mostly very small.

As I am doing whatever they want me to do while walking around this courtyard I am trying to communicate with the other prisoners (who are not humans). If I do this, the small creatures start to dig into my legs and inject some venom that makes me compliant and the earth pets(dogs), who are also prisoners, start to act very strange, perhaps being creatures who are pretending to be dogs.

Both times in this dream I have tried to find an ally or two and they then let me know that if I don't shut up and play by the rules I will be punished. This immediately becomes very upsetting and I no longer want to be there and I sort of realize it is a dream and I try to wake myself up ... as per usual.

Well, this partially worked by only sort of waking me up in the first dream layer where I am back in bed in our bedroom. But I am doing my usual scream in the 2nd dream layer while only having my minimal noise come through in the 1st dream layer... not making it to the outside where Kathy nor I can actually hear the noise.

This goes on for a while as the creatures are pulling me "downward" trying to keep me in the 2nd dream layer. I begin to freak out and the first night that I had the dream I managed to get a snort noise out and it woke me up.

Cal Pierce's Post

Last night the same exact thing happened but I wasn't making real noise yet. So I was freaking out more and it got to where I couldn't scream, yell, or talk at all so I was snorting like crazy in the 2nd dream layer, trying to get it to come through.

Finally I got to where I felt like I was moving my arm in the 1st dream layer which was actually bent across my forehead toward Kathy both in that dream layer and in real life. So I was putting all of my effort to move that arm toward Kathy and by this time I was getting my voice to work in the 1st dream layer.

I realized this might work so I did my best to yell "Kathy grab my hand. Help me wake up!!". I probably did this 5 or 6 times and it finally started to come through in real life. She said I was making a light snorting noise and she noticed my fingers moving. She tried touching me but it didn't work. Then she heard me say "wake up" so she grabbed my hand and I finally woke up.

Holy crap. That was horrible. I refused to go back to sleep so I sat up and watched The Simpsons for a while. It could be combining my night-time anti-anxiety meds with the tramadol pain pill for the gall bladder ... or ... I found some freaky-ass dream world that didn't want me to leave 😬😬😬😬

Skylar Sharpe I know I'm always on my weighted blanket bullshit, but... I swear by them and I honestly think they can help most people who have any kind of sleep problems, especially if you have anxiety. At least a little. The ones by Luna are pretty affordable, and you can find them on Amazon They're less heat-stifling than other brands, too. They regularly have sales and I saw a full-size, 20-lb one on sale for $37 not too long ago. Keep an eye out.

Cal Pierce's Post

I have experienced not only less anxiety when I sleep, but fewer nightmares, and far fewer to no instances of waking up during the night. Crawling under it also puts me out like a light, which I haven't been able to do in several years.

Everyone varies but mine has been a game-changer, so I think it's worth trying. Worse comes to worse, if it doesn't work for you, I will buy it off you because I want to have more. Haha

A dream technique for lucid dreaming (when you know you are dreaming) and need to escape the situation, is to close your eyes in your dream and spin yourself around and around until you're dizzy then open your eyes. The scene changes.

I've done this many times during a nightmare which I felt doom or fear. Give it a try! Look up "dream spinning lucid dream".

I used to have horrible nightmares, and learned to be aware and wake myself from them. I kept a dream journal for years, and talked to my therapist about them. Now, I find that having a radio on at night, (No News!) helps me feel safer when I sleep. Dreams are more intense when one is sick. Hopefully when gall bladder is taken care of, you will do better

Sorry, not very helpful.

Recently I have been simply taking a couple puffs off a joint before bed to help me sleep. All the aches and pains go away and I have nice dreams about laying in bed with several women.

I'm so sorry you're feeling this way. I think it may depend on the results we've seen over time from those struggles. If they've resolved before we may be more hopeful with future ones. If they've compounded over the years I could see it creating more of a growing weight. Stay strong and confident and do what you feel is right, you have a family that loves you and that's no small success ❤️

Cal. I think so but I guess it depends on how you let these valleys effect you. I personally have had health issues in the past few years that really has made me change lifestyle so much. It was depressing and it was eating me up so bad. But my wife helped me bounce back to look at the blessing I still have. They are there and I Clovis on them more than my disease. My faith in Christ plays a big role to but I understand some don't follow that path. Praying for you my friend! You're still so wizard!

Because we no longer have "our whole lives ahead of us". And the older you get the more you realize that if things were going to change, then they probably would have, or would be in progress.

I used to struggle with all those thoughts when I was younger. But I have been getting closer to Jesus and the more I focus on Him and all the promises that await me, the better I feel about the years passing by. This life is still a struggle but all the difficulties here just make me more excited about what lies ahead. Love you! ❤️🙏😊

It feels like the older we get the more life's roadblocks start to compound or double down. Mine has been some health issues some have been fixable (new knee) others are still being worked on. To be honest, I never thought I would be around this long....I thought for sure 40 would have been my cut off date! Some days are better than others....today is a good day! 😊

I have felt like that before in my life. I call that stinkin' thinkin'.

Not to sound like some bible thumping extremist. Whenever I get like that I simply put my troubles in the lord's hands and look for his guidance to lead me through the darkest hours.

You have to make that peace for yourself. If you're not finding your answers outside perhaps you could try looking within your heart for the guidance your looking for.

Subject posted about their accident 1 year later. He said that he has been going to physical therapy, getting exams, and seeing specialists. He noted that the stoplights have been changed in the area, removing the flashing yellow, and was wondering if that led to their accident. Ugh. What a memory. It literally haunts us daily. We are still going to physical therapy every week, getting exams and specialist advice, dealing with the pain every day. It could have been worse so we are thankful. I still feel the flashing yellow arrow was a contributing factor for the 85 year old guy trying to turn in front of us. The next stoplight up the road got rid of the flashing yellow arrow I guess, due to so many accidents. This makes me wonder if there could be a case there too, along with our (still open) case with the driver's insurance company).

Our day didn't quite go as planned. We are "o.k.". I have a fractured sternum from hitting the steering wheel and some very bad whiplash pain... Yay. So, doing pretty much anything on my own has not been much of an option so far. My chest and neck/ back hurt like hell.

But after 6 hours of E.R. attention and CT scans I am finally in a room. Just glad it wasn't worse for the three of us.

Kathy does have pain. So does Kaylee. Kaylee seems excited to tell her friends she was in an accident. Typical 7 year old 😊. I am thankful Kathy has always been on top of the best safety standards when it comes to Kaylee and for her good quality high back booster seat.

So, I get to enjoy the hospitality of the Fort Collins Hospital tonight (where Kaylee was in the NICU at birth).

The accident was not my fault. The other driver got the citation. We were approaching the "Carpenter Rd" intersection on 287, going North. I was in the left-hand / West lane. I am always leery of that intersection, especially driving North as you approach it while going downhill in a 55 mph zone. There are always accidents there.

Anyway, I am pretty sure I instinctively slow a little, around 50 to 55 mph through that spot because of my concerns there. When we were maybe 50 yards from the intersection there was a car sitting in the south bound turn lane (turning East, in front of us) and he started to turn out in front of us. In the moment I decided against chancing going to the left of him (in case he Went out in the moment I decided against turning going to the left of him (in case he stopped) and because there were more cars in his turn lane behind him. So, while beginning to ride the breaks I aimed to the side of the stop light pole, crossing the righthand lane hoping to maybe skirt by him (hoping he would hit the breaks). He definitely did not hit the breaks. I honestly think he hit the gas (maybe on accident or to maybe try and beat us) so it was a very solid collision and he pushed us up onto the concrete at the light pole, spinning his car completely around.

Upon "coming to" I first thought the car was on fire because of the smoke and smell from the airbags so I wanted Kathy to get Kaylee out asap .. which she wasted no time. The other car was up against my door so I couldn't get out that way. I tried crawling out the passenger side but the pain was too bad. I couldn't even lift myself up to get over the console. I just had to sit in there. Thankfully a bunch of witnesses rushed to our aid, including a doctor and they were all amazing.

As soon as they could "drag" me out the passenger side I was loaded into an ambulance. Kathy and Kaylee had to wait for a 2nd ambulance. We got to see each other again after all our tests, close to 3 hours later.

I kind of feel like we got lucky, with not hitting him head on and having him hit the side of the front quarter. If we had hit head on or if he had hit my door, Kaylee's door, or the rear end I kind of fear those scenarios may have been worse.

Drive carefully everyone. We are all in very real danger every time we get out on the road. Have respect for the situation and the heavy steal objects flying by you at high speeds, piloted by the naturally flawed human species. Pay attention. Get off your devices, etc. Hug your loved ones. Make good decisions.

I have seen several people mistake the flashing yellow arrow, often older drivers unfamiliar with the change in light system. The state should have bought lots of media time and put ads everywhere to educate the public.

Victoria Peterson-Smith right. Even though I understood it right out of the gate it is tough to break the reflex habits. I still catch myself letting off the break when I get the flashing yellow arrow. 30, 40, 50, 60 or whatever years driving the way you were taught (which is supposed to engrain those habits so reflexes can kick in) is tough to just change overnight. And if a person's critical thinking skills aren't quite where they should be then you have a recipe for disaster. There are a large number of reasons why someone might not be fully alert, mentally.

LOVELAND, Colo. (KDVR) — Long ago, in a land far away — California — one of the most successful movie franchises in U.S. history was born. Episode 4 of the “Star Wars” trilogy played 46 years ago this month to packed theaters across America.

In another land, just north of Denver — Loveland — a dedicated “Star Wars” fan turned his passion into a full-time job.

To say Cal Pierce is a fan of “Star Wars” would be an understatement.

“As a kid, it was an escape. You know, a place for fantasy to go join Luke Skywalker on his adventures,” Pierce said.

| The 4th is strong at these free ‘Star Wars’ events around Denver ➤

That is why Pierce created Far Away Creations in 2005.

“I had experience in working on the film ‘Fanboys.’ I got to be there for a weekend and help with the theoretical George Lucas prop room and supply pieces for that,” Pierce said.

‘Star Wars’ gear created to exact specs

Headgear, uniforms, equipment — all lovingly made to the exact specifications as the originals.

The Pierce family travels the country to conventions, comic conventions and fan expos to showcase their creations.

Not far from the workshop is the display room. It showcases the many uniforms and props Pierce has made throughout the years.

Working alongside Loveland’s own Luke Skywalker is his wife, Kathy. She was at first not quite on board the Millennium Falcon.

“The first time that he said he wanted to dress up as a storm trooper, I thought he was nuts. What, you want to be an action figure? I thought he was crazy,” Kathy Pierce said.

“Star Wars” may have started in a galaxy long ago and far away, but everything that is “Star Wars” for the Pierce family is here to stay.

May the Fourth be with you.

Personally I'm so looking forward to seeing the complete overhaul of the health care industry. But I feel your pain in the way of having to bend around someone else's schedule just to get something fixed. Looking at it like tool repair. Fixing the little problems before they become larger ones just to get back to work.

I've had my own issues with the health care thing recently just as anyone else who owns a human body to run around in. The last three months driving back and forth to a doctor 175 miles away that accepts my health insurance. Basically spending the whole day just to see the man in the white lab coat for five minutes.

Truly hope your shoulder meds quickly. You, Kathy, and the kiddo are in my prayers.

He wrote that he is frustrated since he and his wife, Kathy, had been complaining of pain since the accident, but feel like they were ignored. He notes that Kathy was looking for a new doctor since her current one told her she would have to deal with the pain. 15 months later and the doctors finally realize that I need surgery on my right shoulder after the car accident. WTF?! A tendon is torn and the muscle is slowly retracting and pulling further and further away. Thankfully it is an "easy" procedure which will lay me up for 4 weeks. Kathy and I both complained about our pains immediately after the accident and for several months following. It has taken both of us pushing and complaining about our pain to get them to figure out our issues. We should be on the healing end of all this by now, not just deciding how to deal with the injuries ☹. Um... with such a major car crash with me having a broken sternum ... and both of us complaining about pains ... why didn't they enact measures to look for more injuries?! We hear that that particular hospital (Poudre Valley) tends to just push people through as fast as they can ☹ It took 5 months for an orthopedic doctor to finally see me. Luckily he reviewed both MRI's for both shoulders even though they acted like he would only review one MRI and then I would need another appointment. Kathy's Ortho just said "this is your new normal". Wait. What?! So she just "gets" to be in tears from the pain almost daily and rely on medication to get even just a little sleep?! She is currently seeking out another doctor.

im so sorry you're going thru all of this. I wish I could tell you I had a better experience down here in Denver, but I didn't. The thing is with some injuries it takes a while for it to manifest. your body is in that survival mode. I just had foot surgery and then I have to have another knee surgery from an accident back in 2014.

I'm sorry about that. You are not alone. Took the VA 15 years to finally acknowledge there are serious issues with my right shoulder and left knee. Now convincing them to do anything might take a few more years. Hang in there. I know your daughter will help you out! I'm not saying abuse the kindness and help, but take full advantage. Soon she will be much older.

My heart goes out to you both, and anyone else under the control of the health care industry. It really seems anymore that their primary focus is in making money and seeing how it's the insurance companies calling the shots in what they will pay for or not we don't have a chance.

I know in my every fiber of being that the whole industry as it is today is on life support and big changes are just ahead of us in the near future.

Hang in there, things will get better.

This is so frustrating to read and even more frustrating and inexcusable for both of you. Having spent years of our lives chasing what in every case, for all three of us, should have been something diagnosed by the book, I understand as best I can what you're going through (everybody experiences and feels these frustrations and the pain differently). Good grief. It's times like this I wish we were millionaires so we could step in and make things better! We'll pray for that one doctor who "gets it" to help Kathy and for your upcoming procedure and recovery. Wish we could do more to help out in the shop. 🙏 ❤️

Subject posted pictures of a trip that he took with his wife, Kathy, and their daughter, Kaylee, to the Colorado Railroad Museum as part of their Star Wars group. He can be seen riding bumper boats, bumper cars, and a go-kart. It was a good day. Started off with a "troop" at an annual event that I am pretty sure we have never missed, going back over a decade, at the Colorado Model Railroad Museum with the 501st Mountain Garrison and the Rebel Legion: Mountain Base . Followed by a trip up to Estes Park for some go-kart, bumper boat, bumper car, and mini-golf action.

Subject posted that he has been feeling anxious. Boredom or anxiety? If you had to choose one, which one would it be? With having a kid who often says she is bored I have tried to recall the last time I was bored. I feel like I must have still been in school. I think that state of mental being was traded out somewhere along the way for more (and regular) anxiety. Now the only state of being I find to be "annoying" which I seem to have no short supply of is being anxious. ☐

I'll take boredom over anxiety any time. I can usually find something to do to decrease boredom. But when anxiety hits, that's a different thing. It's not something you can wish away or choose not to experience. I find it paralyzing. When I can be by myself and do something relaxing or productive, that helps. As does a cat in the lap.

Boredom lives rent free in simple minds. Anxiety is a product of self doubt and fear. If you live your life thinking of what you can't do, guess what? You won't. It's called, "Stinkin' Thinkin'" for a reason.

"Why can't I be rich?"

You probably have never tried.

"Why doesn't anyone love me?"

Do you first love yourself?

"I ask everyone I know but I still have the same old problems."

Stop asking for permission to change what only you can do.

I'm sorry if I come off as curt. You ask adult questions, you get old man answers.

Hope things get better soon.

Would any of my local friends be up for helping with some lifting / moving set panels tomorrow? We are shorthanded so it might just be Jenny, Masume .. and Kathy ... and me with my wrecked shoulders. I am trying to baby my left one and stick to P.T. under doctors orders so it can hopefully be strong next month after the surgery on the right shoulder. We will be putting the Jabba's Palace set back in storage upon arriving back home with it hopefully around noon tomorrow.

Subject and his family went to the fishing derby at Oak Creek. This fishing Derby in Oak Creek has become an annual tradition for us. Kaylee loves it and while she can get a little bored with fishing, she loves playing with the worms, loves reeling in the fish, and as of today, loves grabbing a fish with her bare hands. She also loves eating them which is probably the main reason we keep coming. Happy Labor day weekend to those who celebrate and / or take this time to spend with friends and loved ones! Oh... and we finally had not one .. but two days to freely take off from work that aren't weekend days ☺. (Trying to stave off Tuesday lol.. ☺)

Subject posted that he had left shoulder surgery scheduled due to his car accident. He said that he was frustrated since the injury was not noticed right after the accident, and he had complained of sharp pain. The right shoulder was also found to have a tear that needs to be repaired. The car crash in 2022 keeps on giving. Shoulder surgery is now scheduled for this coming Wednesday. We believed it was going to be this past Thursday, as they didn't explain their consultation process to me at my appointment 2 months ago which includes first meeting with a doctor and then meeting with a surgeon before they can schedule surgery. The first MRI, on my left shoulder was in February. The soonest they could get me in with the orthopedic doctor to review it took place 5 months later in July. Thankfully I was able to get the MRI on my right shoulder within that period as that is the shoulder that needs one of the rotator cuff muscles stitched back together. The left shoulder has been healing itself as the bone peeled up a little where the tendon is attached and it laid back down. I assume all this was from tensing up while holding the steering wheel prior to impact. It would have been nice if they would have made an effort to look for these things at the time of the accident, especially since I mentioned shooting pains over both shoulders. The first ortho appointment in July was with an orthopedic doctor. He showed me the MRI's and explained that I needed surgery. He said "would you like to get that scheduled?" I said "Yes." He then had me go talk to scheduling. They didn't tell me that the appointment they were scheduling (2 months out) was with an orthopedic surgeon to then schedule the surgery, which is what this latest appointment was. Both consultations were nearly identical but I guess it makes sense? ^_^(^_^. Just add another two months I guess. The surgery sounds pretty simple, being orthoscopic so hopefully it isn't too huge of a deal. They say I will be in a sling for probably 6 weeks and it could take a year and a half to start feeling "normal" again.

For my shoulder surgery they had me in an immobilizer which is a metal bar attached to the sling which positions your arm at a specific distance from the body. I purchased a $100 recliner from Wal-Mart before surgery so I had a place to sleep. The recliner was a blessing otherwise, I have no idea how I would have slept. Hope you have a recliner and if not, I suggest you get one before surgery.

I have had both shoulders repaired. The recliner is a good suggestion. Do you have a polar care cube to keep shoulder iced after surgery? It really helped me. Also, insist on adequate PT. I got shorted on my recovery from first surgery, but got plenty of (painful) but very effective PT on the second one. Recovering range of motion took many months after first surgery. 6 weeks after second! Good luck!

As a former therapist doing home health, please follow all post surgical instructions! If you start to feel better after surgery and try to do the physical activities you have been waiting to get back to, please remember that going past your limits before you are supposed to will set back your healing process. I saw this happen time and again with my patients. Be patient with your body and allow yourself the time it needs to heal. It will produce a better outcome in the long run than to do an activity (pulling, pushing, lifting) before you are supposed to. Love and Hugs Cal!

Subject posted that he will be going to his 2nd therapy session after his surgery. He explained that it was hard working with one arm and that it was wearing on him physically and mentally. Going to my 2nd physical therapy visit since the surgery. I actually look forward to these P.T. visits, way more than the however many visits I have already had since the car crash in 2022. They are physically moving the arm through the passive range of motions while it is relaxed and it actually feels quite good. Being down to primarily getting by using my dumb arm has been very challenging, not just physically, partially because it has a similar injury ... but mentally / emotionally. Slowly getting basic motions out of my right hand has been amazing. Just little things like being able to text, play a video game, or blow my nose with both hands, things like that but it is making me really appreciate the little things. I just gotta put up with my evil brain. Too much time alone with that thing is tough.

Subject posted that he was able to take off his sling after 6 weeks. He mentioned that he had gone through depression, disappointment, and sadness during that time. He is looking forward to being able to work around his business again. He also mentioned that his wife, Kathy, was dealing with her pain and injuries as well. So long sling! That was a challenging 6 weeks. Today I have permission to go sling free and therapy began the next step at today's session so I am hopeful for better days ahead. I imagine I might still use the sling here and there. I am definitely looking forward to the day when I can wash my hair with my right hand and ... comb my hair ... and wipe my back side ☺. My therapist says within 2 weeks! ☺

For being absent, I apologize. I just haven't been in a good place at all. I am trying to move past that but it is still hanging on. Thank you to those who have reached out to check on us or help!

Many people might have enjoyed the down time but it has been sort of torturous for me. I have been slipping into and wading through bouts of depression, sadness, disappointment, self-loathing, etc. I feel bad for Kathy cause she also has injuries and is in pain and she is taking care of all of us. Plus I haven't been in the mood for the toxicity of social media ... or talking to people in general to be honest. I can't take any B.S. from anyone right now. Not even the slightest. Just please be good humans.

Lying around, watching T.V., and playing Minecraft was sort of nice I guess but it has gone against my nature. Plus it has been really difficult getting decent sleep with rotating between the recliner, the couch, and the bed while mostly being in the recliner.

I have always been very independent, to the point where I might hurt myself before asking for help. I have always been capable and active, needing a constant creative outlet in some way. So this has been very challenging for me.

It hasn't just been the lack of ability. It has combined with my frustration and sadness with our current situation with business goals, etc. I believed we would be at a different place with our business achievements at this time, especially with being so incredibly close a few times but life, the world, people, and reality has kept that out of reach.

I have tried to pop into the workshop most days to visit the crew and see how they are doing but I realized I have mostly been useless and a distraction.

I am really hoping I can begin my next step by at least doing some computer work to help Kathy with some of the messages. It will be nice if I can begin running the mouse while using the keyboard so perhaps I can spend some time designing things in Blender again. Hopefully then I can progress up to being able to run our 3D printers again and then slowly be able to help with daily production. I imagine it will be some time before I can run the vacuum forming machine again (carrying the tooling) or carry plastic in from the delivery truck.

"This too shall pass" right? 😊 Just breathe and take one step at a time. See less

I'm sorry that I didn't know you had these issues. Guessing the brace is for the arm but I see it setting on some hairy skin in the photo.
Personally I'm pretty much stuck at home and limited to travel within the length of air hose from the oxygen generator in my office. I haven't seen anything like a payday in well over a year, living on my wife's SS checks and draining our savings $300 a month just to eat.
I'm not looking for sympathy only trying to say that I understand how feeling useless can be. It stinks, but it's not permanent.
Get well soon my friend. Wish I could help you more.

Subject posted that their rent was going to be raised again. He is frustrated because their place needs repairs that they have been waiting for. He was hoping that the accident settlement may help them get their own place. Hmm... our landlord says they are planning to raise our rent again. Probably another exorbitant jump (It was over $500 last time). We "get to" find out how much on Monday. Thanks for the wonderful, friendly Friday evening message ☺ And they are using our business sign on the house as an excuse. The sign that they gave us permission to put up ... 12 years ago, that was up at our previous location with them. The sign that is 100 yards from the road and can't be seen unless you are right up against the building, behind the giant pine tree, that is basically only there for the UPS drivers and any acquaintances who want to come see what we do, so they know that they are at the correct freaking location. Not to mention, probably 95% of the properties on this road are commercial now ... and the landlords are guilty of perpetuating the commercialization of the road themselves because they turned the property next door into an RV storage place around the house that is there, with no discretion. Our guess ... other than possible greed like usual? ... Since they probably own a good percentage of the city's rental properties ... maybe they have a number of empty rental properties (we hear many places are struggling to find renters because the prices are so high) so they are deciding to squeeze the tenants that they do have? Namely us, because they know we have a small business and we have been renting from them for 15 years (3 years at a warehouse, then 12 years here)? Our neighbors directly in front of us are moving out currently, to go live with a relative because they can't afford the rent. And that place is a mouse-filled, noisy shack (built in 1925), right on the busy highway.. This shit is out of control. Is the market going to crash here in Colorado or what? I have a hard time believing they would find someone else to rent this place (largely because it is so weird and wouldn't pass code) and even if they can, I doubt a new renter would be here for long, perpetuating renter turnover and renovation costs. And that is what it might come to. This might finally squeeze us out. At least out of this property anyway. Not sure what we will do but ironically, given how "done" I have been feeling about life and everything lately, I kinda want to fight this shit. I mean, find a way into our own property again, somehow, so we can relieve ourselves of the burden of having a landlord who won't fix the garage door weatherstripping after 12 years of asking, only to keep raising the rent. Maybe the car crash case will have a decent settlement and will help us into our own place again ... and maybe the market will crash at the same time ☺☺ ... so we can get into a foreclosure or something. IDK. ^_^()_/- Ugh.

Hard times all round, really sucks for you and I hope you can find something else, same everywhere at the moment, we are kind of the same with our rental that we are in, paying nearly $800.00 a week but can't get enough for a deposit on a house, fortunately our landlords are really good with us, plus we are almost on the beach, but Fortunately our land lords are really good with us, plus we are almost on the beach, but still, we can service a mortgage just not the deposit.

I hope things work out for you and the business site wise. Take care as best you can, wish I was over your way to help more practically.

You should look to see if there is a limit on how much and how often they can change the rent. Several municipalities pass laws and no one is aware of them and of course the government doesn't know what's going on.

Do a formal letter stating all the code violations and a time frame to have them up to code or you won't pay rent and become a squatter

Hand them a copy and say the original is ready to go to the housing authority in your state.

Renters have rights

Also. If you have a lease. It's documented if and when and how much a landlord can raise the rent

Cal Pierce's Post

The cost of housing in Colorado is out of control which may be because so many from California and Texas were/are moving here.

Many landlords/property owners lost revenue during the pandemic, with businesses going under and people out of work because of the disastrous, unnecessary lockdowns (FJB, Fauci, Gates et al), they're trying to recoup on losses and we the people are paying the price. The bottom was supposed to drop out by now. Colorado Springs has had a surge of new apartment buildings being built all over the city and I'm wondering who will be renting.

I wish I'd bought land long ago like I've wanted for so long and built my own place.

There are some great suggestions here. I say fight it. Make a list of all that has not been repaired or maintained properly and fight.

Property taxes went sky high. If my renter wasn't my brother I'd be doubling the rent myself. Renting is suppose to help with a landlord's financial situation and make a profit. I've been in the red for some time. One of the reasons I'm selling and getting out of Colorado. Consider our side, it's too damn difficult for landlords to make a living with renting. Thank God I have a full-time government job, but for some landlord's renting is their full-time job. Yes, a lot of landlord's here are selling to get out of ridiculously high property and income taxes, not to mention the already high mortgage payments we already pay. Things keep going up, so rent keeps going up. Both of us are on both sides of an ugly coin....

Oh, I'm considering retiring in Cheyenne, WY. No state income tax, very low property taxes, traffic isn't all that bad, and I found some really nice mobile homes for less than $100K. I'm also looking at metal buildings for a shop and small apartment, a place for the droids 3D printers, sewing machine, and weaving looms. Not a big place, just something I can live comfortably in and store stuff while I travel in the van...

Subject reached out to his friends to ask if anyone could help with lifting at his business. He said that his shoulder was only 20% healed, so he was unable to lift, and he worried that it would be too heavy for his co-workers. Anyone local wanna help us with some vacuum forming this week? ☺. We mostly need help with lifting and carrying the forming bucks to the machine, the cut table, and back to the shelf. My shoulder is only at 20% healed and I won't be able to lift anything heavy for quite some time and the bucks might be a little heavy for the girls.

Subject posted that he had finished his second full week of work after being off for over four months due to surgery on his right shoulder. He noted how difficult it is to work with just his "dumb arm". His doctor wants to see if he needs surgery on his left arm. His wife, Kathy, is having pain while walking. Injuries were due to their car accident. Subject also states that he is also having mental problems due to his trouble and was in a "dark place." I just completed my 2nd full week of work in the workshop after 4 1/2 emotionally (and physically) challenging months "off". I didn't expect to feel so useless without the use of my dominant arm. (Try wiping your backside with your dumb arm ☺) On top of that, Kathy is in so much pain also with her hip that it had me feeling pretty terrible, not really able to help. It put me in a dark place for a while, ignoring the world, sleeping, and playing minecraft. I struggle with existential and imposter syndrome issues enough as it is (silly artist brain). As a creator / maker, this has not been a good situation for me, emotionally. I am very thankful for our friends and helpers who have done what they can to help us. (See below) I started feeling better when I could push the grocery cart again and also carry groceries. I think this really helped Kathy as just one loop walking around the store often has her in tears, let alone pushing the cart. Now with doing things in the workshop more and more I am starting to feel like my old self. I still have a ways to go (currently at 45% healed) and they now want to do another MRI on the left shoulder to see if it needs surgery but as long as my dominant arm keeps getting better and I can still be useful, I think I will be O.K. The doctors are still trying to figure out Kathy's pains and injuries. All of this is still from the car crash in 2022. To say we are getting a little tired of it might be an understatement ☺ Thanks to our friends and helpers Matt Haslam Jenny Shumaker Masume Takeda Matt Banks Todd Falzarano Alex Haugen for the help in the workshop and thanks to all of our good friends for just being you and being there for us!

Subject posted that his surgeon told him he would need surgery on his left shoulder as well. He also posted that his wife, Kathy, would possibly need hip surgery. Subject notes that it has been 2 years since their accident, and they are still dealing with their injuries. After meeting with my surgeon and reviewing the new MRI it looks like I will need to plan for surgery on the left shoulder also this year. And after Kathy's hip surgeon administered a numbing shot test in her hip joint on Thursday it is looking like she might also need surgery, on her hip. We are almost 2 years out from the car crash and we are just now finally figuring out our injuries. WTH?! . Hopefully it will all yield positive results ... within the next 2 years ☺ yay? ☺

Subject requested help from his friends to set up a Star Wars event. He admits to having forgotten about it due to the issues he and his wife had been dealing with. He also states that due to dental procedures, he is not supposed to talk, laugh, or smile for the next two weeks. might be looking for a helper this coming Saturday if someone would be up for joining me at a Star Wars-ey event in Boulder? ☺ With all that Kathy and I have been dealing with lately I kinda spaced this school fundraising event that I loosely promised to help with a few months back. It is this Saturday at the Embassy Suites in Boulder. The private event itself where they would like folks in costume and our set displays ready for, I believe is from 6:00pm to 8:00pm. I will confirm. I initially let them know about and referred them to the local Mountain Garrison of the 501st Legion for characters, which it does sound like some of our awesome 501st friends will indeed be going. They would like our landspeeder, R2-D2, death star walls, and a character or two if we want to bring any mannequins. The landspeeder is already loaded in the trailer so thats good. I will be unloading the baby bantha and other items and then loading the death star walls and R2 on Friday. We will need to head down to Boulder maybe mid day on Saturday. It sounds like they will let us tear down either Saturday evening after the gala or Sunday morning. It is possible they might have a motel room for us if we choose to stay but I need to confirm that. I am not sure yet if there is monetary compensation. I think they originally proposed that but with all we have been dealing with, the details of this event kinda slipped my mind and I didnt follow up on that. I am currently working on getting all that information. Please reach out via messenger or text. I had additional work in my mouth done yesterday and now I have stitches in there so I am not supposed to talk ... or laugh / smile much if I can help it... for two weeks. Yay ☺ Thanks!! ☺

Subject posted that he was getting left shoulder surgery in September 2024, about a year after his right shoulder. He noted that his right shoulder was at 70% but he was still limited on what he could lift. Surgery on my left shoulder is now scheduled for September 18th. One year and 4 days after the right shoulder. Yay? ☺ At least my right shoulder is starting to surpass the left shoulder (regarding feeling "good") and they tell me it should be at 70% now. Though I am still not allowed to lift more than about 30 to 40 lbs and definitely not above waist level. The surgeon is still a little concerned about me running our vacuum forming machine. The goal is to get my right arm mostly functional again before doing the left one. Though a lot of people say it can take a year and a half before each shoulder is back to "normal".

I do hope the both of you heal quickly. You're both far to young to be feeling this old.

Cal Pierce We do recognize that we were fairly "lucky". I still run the crash through my mind frequently and while I question whether I reacted appropriately I tend to believe it could have been worse if I had done anything differently ... in those 3 seconds or whatever it was.

Subject posted that he is trying to get used to having his teeth removed while waiting for his dentures. I had heard of phantom limb syndrome but not phantom teeth ☹. When I am sitting still and if I sort of puff out my lips a little, I have a sensation that my upper front teeth are still there. And when I don't have my lower partial in, the sensation extends to the lower teeth that are also not there. On top of that if I slowly move my jaw as if I were closing the gap on them I also get the sensation that they touch and pull apart as I open my jaw. Super weird ☹ I told Kaylee and she said "Aww ... their little dead souls are still in your mouth" ☹

Subject posted that getting his dentures was delayed due to bone fragments. He was limited to soups and blended food and initially lost a lot of weight. So .. I was supposed to get the dental impression for my upper denture made this past Monday but because of all the bone fragments still present, needing to work their way out through the tissue and the current inflammation they don't want to make the impression yet. There is a bigger bone fragment on the side that is part way sticking out and is annoying. I wish they would have just cut that one out when they dremeled down the bone Spike in the front. I agree with this assessment because I get the need for good registration with the denture but I also have a big convention coming up that I would kinda like to have teeth for. So I am making them move forward. They did say I will probably want to pay the $2k or whatever out of pocket for a new denture in 2 years anyway since the bone and tissue will hopefully be done remodeling by then. They took an alginate impression for creating the plate and they are having me brush my gums at least 3 times a day to try and get those fragments to break through. I hope to make at least some progress with that so they can get a decent impression this coming Tuesday, hopefully providing me with the denture in time. Definitely tired of soups and blended foods ☺. At least we have better control of the weight loss that kicked off the first couple weeks.

Subject posted that he just finished mowing their lawn. He said that his shoulder and arms hurt. He was worried that he may have done too much with his right arm, but figured his left would have surgery that year anyway. I guess it was time to mow the grass ☺. 6 hours later I almost got all the yards done before the rain kept me from doing the last 30 minutes or so of cleanup. My arms and shoulders are dead ☺. I hope I didn't push the right one too far. The left one gets operated on this year anyway so whatever on that one I guess ☺

Subject posted a picture of him and his family, Kathy, and Kaylee going to see the movie, IF. love family movie time. We don't get to do it much so it is extra special. And "IF" is a decent flick. A little more on the emotional side vs comedy than I was expecting but still good. I am a big ole sap though when watching movies. I tend to really connect with the emotional aspect of a story.

Subject posted that he took his daughter, Kaylee, rollerskating. They went slowly and he did not fall. His daughter was worried that he was going to fall on her. When was the last time I was on roller skates? ☺ ... circa 1987 probably. I admit, it was a little worrisome for the first hour where we mostly stayed on the carpet around the perimeter ☺. I was anticipating a sore tailbone and Kaylee was scared I was going to fall on her and crush her ☺. But then I was like ... "C'mon. I loved skating as a kid. I went from roller skating to skateboarding and rollerblading into my college years. I have to figure this out!". By the end I was staying entirely on the rink. Going slowly but I did it. I survived! And I never fell down! ... well ... there was a questionable "hard sit" at the very end when we sat down to take our skates off ☺ It was fun. I hope the kiddo and I can get into it together. Maybe one day I will skate in my Stormtrooper costume ☺ See less

Dani Pierce the yukon could be totaled. The right rear quarter panel is buckled and I kind of wonder if the axle is pushed forward on the right. It was a hard impact. Probably similar to the one in 2015 with the last Yukon. Just, this time there wasn't a vehicle in front of me or coming toward me. Check out the antifreeze on the road, how far forward she kept going after launching us out of the way. Then she slowly rolled backward.

Cal Pierce glad everyone is ok. I seriously doubt an airbag designed to deploy in a frontal impact would now suddenly go off on its own. But if you're worried about it you can simply pull the fuse marked, SRS.

If the axel is indeed pushed forward the truck will dog track slightly to the left. As you probably know that would effect handling and tire wear. Not to mention driveshaft misalignment that would cause vibration.

A Yukon has a triangulated four link with coil springs in the rear, correct? If the impact didn't pop the tire and the panel is buckled I would guess the frame is bent ahead of the wheel from the impact to the bumper.

Kent Stone We just drove home .. maybe 2 miles and parked it. In all the accidents I have been in where airbags didn't go off the responders always warn us of the possibility. I doubt it as well but I would rather not take the chance. Insurance wants to pick it up on Monday anyway.

This really makes me think. This is the little radio control in the back of the console. Imagine this controller sitting still. Our car was launched forward in an instant, snapping away from this controller, leaving it in its position in space. The side mirrors were snapped closed. The sunroof door was snapped open. Everything in the back of the car was up against the back hatch including a heavy Rubbermaid tote full of tools that had been up against the back seat. Her antifreeze trail on the ground shows how far forward she traveled after launching us out of the way and then she rolled backwards.

I'm so sorry, that really sucks. I'm glad you're both not super seriously injured, guess this was a sign to get the Yukon totaled and get a new one. Hope you're able to get a vehicle for this weekend though. I know you can't take it super easy but both of you try to take it easy, have the others do most of the work.

Was it hit by the back of the seat or did the seat catch it at some point as it was falling? It would be an interesting recreation project for Adam Savage to video I think. I can't get the image out of my head of the guy at the beginning of the cars on the right side who was pulling his 2 boys out of the back of his car and putting them in a wagon that was on the dotted line between the lanes. Subject posted that his replacement car is not working. He commented that his Yukon was totaled in the car accident when it was hit "by the drunk girl". He is hoping that with his settlement, he can buy two cars since their other car is not working either. Do not buy an Acadia ... or any GMC with the same engine setup. With the drunk girl killing my yukon and our other car breaking down ... again, we are without a car unless Matt Banks (thanks Matt!) and I can get this latest issue fixed. I guess we will be buying 2 cars when the settlement comes.

Subject posted a health status update of himself and his wife, Kathy. He discussed his dental problems after having teeth extracted for dentures. He also said that Kathy was getting better, not needing her brace, walker, or the CPM machine, and was just using one crutch. Updates on Kathy and me. I requested a trip back to the dentist yesterday after the upper teeth extractions 10 days ago. The dentist (not my regular dentist) left a spire of bone dead center in the front that was about 1/4" tall with the skin stretched up over it which was incredibly painful and annoying. Apparently he wanted it there to help with registration with the denture. It was a section that hadn't decayed like most of the bone in my mouth and it had been supporting the two front teeth. The last 2 days at a local convention trying to talk when I had to was no fun at all. I tried to keep living with it as the jagged edges (of which there are many in my mouth) are supposed to self model and smooth out over time but damn... really? A 1/4" spire of bone right in the front? Where when I would eat or talk I would sometimes bite it with my lower partial and / or the skin is just pulled back and forth over the point? Well, my regular dentist agreed that it needed to come down so she opened up the skin, clipped and dremeled the bone down and re-stitched the skin. Now I am not supposed to speak or laugh (at least facially) at all for 2 weeks. Always having tons of fun around here ☺ In other positive news, Kathy seems to be doing better. She is now free of her brace, off the CPM machine, off her walker, and now mostly down to one crutch and she can walk some when comfortable and not at risk of twisting, etc. She has been driving a little bit and even able to pick up Kaylee from school. So that is good!

Kent Stone I know people say they can get dentures "right away" but I see the logic in what they told me. Maybe this is more specific to my particular state of bone loss, IDK. But it makes sense that the bone needs time to shrink and remodel which also changes the tissue. If a denture is $3k then why pay $3k several times, each time you feel you want it to fit better until the bone and tissue finish remodeling? I can only "afford" one denture by letting our insurance pay for it once so I have to wait until my mouth is ready for it.

Cal Pierce where I come from we call that, stinkin' thinkin'. It's what is often called a permanent solution to a temporary problem. I can only hope that you fully understand what I'm talking about.

I can understand something about what your going through. They tell me I have cancer and I spent Christmas and new years alone in a hospital not knowing if I would ever see home again. I wake every morning looking forward to the day ahead, being with my wife, and thanking God that I'm alive.

I still have cancer, still taking chemo. But there are days that go by that I don't even think about having a life threatening condition. Things may happen to change my everyday life. But I will refuse to let life change my heart. Make me sick from worry and stress.

I was asked if I had an advanced directive. A living will for when I would like them to stop trying to revive me if things got bad.

I looked them straight in the eye and said they can stop trying to revive me after I started to stink.

I will not go gently into the night.

I have been in similar situations, especially after car accident in 1976, where my face and knees were badly damaged. The other driver was not insured. I was assigned a plastic surgeon to put my nose and jaw back together, while another surgeon dug all the plastic (from my dashboard) out of my legs and repaired my knees. Over the next year I fought insurance over everything I needed done. Root canals followed, on one whole side of my jaw. Finally, my dentist insisted that I have my own no fault insurance cover what they would, and give me an extra fund to continue care later, after insurance settled my case. I was young, and healed eventually. But still have had on-going follow-up care by multiple dentists. I pay more, but have a Dentist now who is also a Dental Surgeon, so I don't have to see a random dentist for emergency work. I am happy you both survived, and hope you both get everything you need done, and get the insurance coverage you need too. {{[Hugs]}} Keep healing! I am 71 this year, and still walk at least a mile or two with other seniors, (some in their 90s) every morning. Most of us have had surgical repairs and some replacement parts over the years, but we are grateful to have mobility and friends to enjoy it with. I hope to see you at future events, as I am getting back from my latest mobility challenging situation and can finally wear my costume boots again.

Nearly 5 years without being able to eat regular pizza. OMG. Talk about amazing and delicious... and zero pain. The things we take for granted.

Scott Glasgow Bad Gerd for many years which turned out to be exacerbated by a slowly dying gallbladder ... if only the doctors could have recognized that early on 😳. And then my dental issues after that with losing jaw bone and teeth falling out. I am just now kind of getting a handle on eating and swallowing with this denture.

Cal Pierce I tell my patients that it's like cutting your leg off below the knee and getting a peg leg there. You can't do much at first, but once you kinda begin to make friends with your new denture, it DOES get better and you can eventually eat most anything you want. It's just very different. Hang in there, Cal! I feel for you. Brother! Small bites. 😊

Subject posted a meme about trauma not making a person stronger. He commented that his family has been struggling due to various traumas they experienced over the years. He is feeling anxiety and depression. He also said that he would not mind going to a motel room by himself for a few days. We can attest. Even our kiddo. And there doesn't have to be some massive gory experience for there to be trauma. We now have a string of traumatic experiences going back over a decade. My current state of hypervigilance is definitely at its highest and it is exhausting. My anxiety is through the roof and I guess to "balance" that, my depression and self doubt are right there to camp on the other end of that teeter totter. Definitely tired of it all. I keep thinking how nice several days in a motel room completely by myself would be while the world is o.k. with that and let's me have it.

Trauma doesn't make people stronger.

It damages their nervous system.
It hijacks their digestive track.
It keeps the person in a constant loop of hypervigilance. To tell someone they are stronger because of trauma is to deny what it has cost them to survive.

Subject posted that he may need another shoulder surgery after having undergone treatment a year ago. He notes he has been dealing with shoulder issues for 3.5 years. He reposted last year's post regarding getting shoulder surgery and the struggle it brought both physically and mentally. He also mentions the problems his wife Kathy has had with her hips. One week left and then back to one arm again. Anxiety levels are definitely rising. I'm both a little excited (for next July anyway) and nervous about well, everything. I still have a big list of things to accomplish beforehand. I am also feeling concerns regarding my mental state afterward.

Last year I slipped into a super dark place and I was steeped in that for a long time. I didn't know how useless I would be without my dominant arm and it hit me really hard.

At least this time I won't be trying to function with just my dumb arm. Who knew how dumb that arm would be 😊

I have been contemplating seeking counseling for a year now and my doctor, physical therapist, surgeon, and a couple good friends all strongly recommended that I get on that.

Well I finally worked up the gumption to do it last Friday and called the facility my doctor recommended. I answered a ton of preliminary questions over the phone, she then said to fill out (and I quote) "A Lot of paperwork" over the weekend so we could begin with an intro therapy session over the phone. Which, I have zero desire to talk over the phone about this stuff, especially with a stranger. And then she said it would be at least two months before they could see me. This will be after the worst of the recovery period and I will be out of the sling at that point.

I took a year to work up the motivation and then they make it challenging to initiate. Pfff... 😊. And I am sooo tired of not being able to have calm "normal" days. I am done with all the appointments and interruptions to our day.

Thankfully Kathy has made a huge improvement since her hip surgery. She did have to start up PT again but it is a more positive situation this time and she can move normally again, without being in tears from the pain just trying to shop for groceries.

So I guess I will just do my best to stay busy as usual and try to add some kind of fun activities to look forward to .. or something. IDK.

On a positive note, I am looking forward to oh ... July. I should be feeling decent by then. And then by next September if all goes well I will be feeling pretty o.k. again.

And, for more positivity, I have glasses this time so I can see. I also don't have the debilitating GERD pain .. AND because of that and being more used to my denture I can eat almost anything I want again. OMG that has been a long time coming which is just amazing! Plus I was probably

So very pleased that Kathy is improving. One of the absolute worst things that you can do for yourself is to fall into a state of depression. I call that, "stinkin' thinkin'". Fight and do anything you can to not fall through that self pity trapdoor. Hell, even binge watching girl on girl porn to distract yourself may even work. 😊
Best of luck to you both.

Subject posted that this was his last 24 hours to use his left arm for a few months due to pending surgery. He had the same surgery on his right arm the year before. Both surgeries are due to his car accident. He was trying to accomplish as much as possible before the surgery. Down to my last 24 hours with the use of my left arm, at least for several months anyway. And because of course I do, I have a big "to-do" list to accomplish and while it has been getting smaller I won't be getting it all done so I get to hover and guide my helpers on some things ☺. I had the same surgery on my right shoulder a year ago so I know what to expect but that only partially helps with my anxiety. This is all still dealing with the outcome of our bad car crash 2.5 years ago. I am glad though that I will still have my "smart" arm this time.

He said the surgery went well, but the tear that was repaired had gotten worse since his earlier MRI and was worse than the other shoulder. Typing with one thumb ☺ but this here gives me hope. The surgery went well. I guess the tear was worse than the other shoulder and bigger than it was in the 1.5 year old MRI. Maybe it got worse? But ... Subject posted a picture of his arm in a sling. He is adjusting to working with one arm. He said that it is hard to sleep in a recliner. It will be 5 more weeks until it is off. Back to the shoulder surgery post-op lifestyle. Thankfully I have my dominant arm to get by with this time around but it hasn't exactly been easy and it will be several months before I can start using the left arm for basic tasks. PC work is largely one handed now except I am using this mini keypad for 3D modeling in Blender. Using the phone for posting updates isn't too bad so that is good. I just need to get to where I can sleep somewhat normally again... which could be a while yet. Still trying to sleep in the recliner which isn't easy, especially when the shoulder is angry ☹ 5 more weeks in the sling and then hopefully things will start to get better.

I have a different sling that goes around opposite shoulder so that not rubbing on your neck. You're welcome to try it out if you'd like. I've had both rotator cuffs repaired and have some lessons learned for those of us that are not back sleepers. Let me know if interested.

Subject requested that any friends could help finish his daughter's Halloween costume. He was not able to get it done before his shoulder surgery. He tried but had to work on getting out new products for his business since sales were down. Would any of our local friends be interested in helping us finish Kaylee's Halloween costume over the course of the next week? ↗ I really tried to get most of it done before my surgery but with sales being down this year I was worried and focused more on new products and etsy shop improvements so now we are down to the wire. We are going a little more out this year being that she is 10 now and it is something neat to add to the portfolio. Plus we promised a year ago to make this for her. Shoot me a PM and let me know if you would wanna come hang out and help. We also plan to work on it through the weekend. It is fairly easy stuff at this point so mostly sitting around the workshop together, assembling parts. Thanks ↗

Subject posted a picture of his shoulder sling. He wrote that he had to wear it for six weeks and sleep in a recliner and only wear button-down shirts during that time. I'm freeee! ☺. Past the worst part, the first 6 weeks of being in this sling, "sleeping" in a recliner in button-up shirts. It is so nice being able to lie down and "sleep" in bed (being that sleeping is still a chore but it is getting better).

Subject picture of him and his wife, Kathy, and their daughter, Kaylee. They went to a movie. He notes that they are not able to go often. That was more fun than I was expecting. I would be open to a sequel. Any movie at the theater with the family is fun too though, especially since we don't get to go often. Several things played out similarly to mine and Kaylee's Minecraft world.

Our day didn't quite go as planned. We are "o.k.". I have a fractured sternum from hitting the steering wheel and some very bad whiplash pain... Yay. So, doing pretty much anything on my own has not been much of an option so far. My chest and neck/ back hurt like hell.

But after 6 hours of E.R. attention and CT scans I am finally in a room. Just glad it wasn't worse for the three of us.

Kathy does have pain. So does Kaylee. Kaylee seems excited to tell her friends she was in an accident. Typical 7 year old 😊. I am thankful Kathy has always been on top of the best safety standards when it comes to Kaylee and for her good quality high back booster seat.

So, I get to enjoy the hospitality of the Fort Collins Hospital tonight (where Kaylee was in the NICU at birth).

The accident was not my fault. The other driver got the citation. We were approaching the "Carpenter Rd" intersection on 287, going North. I was in the left-hand / West lane. I am always leery of that intersection, especially driving North as you approach it while going downhill in a 55 mph zone. There are always accidents there.

Anyway, I am pretty sure I instinctively slow a little, around 50 to 55 mph through that spot because of my concerns there. When we were maybe 50 yards from the intersection there was a car sitting in the south bound turn lane (turning East, in front of us) and he started to turn out in front of us. In the moment I decided against chancing going to the left of him (in case he stopped) and because there were more cars in his turn lane behind him. So, while beginning to ride the breaks I aimed to the side of the stop light pole, crossing the righthand lane hoping to maybe skirt by him (hoping he would hit the breaks). He definitely did not hit the breaks. I honestly think he hit the gas (maybe on accident or to maybe try and beat us) so it was a very solid collision and he pushed us up onto the concrete at the light pole, spinning his car completely around.

Cal Pierce's Post

Wednesday night we hit the gas (maybe on accident or to maybe be by and beat us, so it was a very solid collision and he pushed us up onto the concrete at the light pole, spinning his car completely around.

Upon "coming to" I first thought the car was on fire because of the smoke and smell from the airbags so I wanted Kathy to get Kaylee out asap .. which she wasted no time. The other car was up against my door so I couldn't get out that way. I tried crawling out the passenger side but the pain was too bad. I couldn't even lift myself up to get over the console. I just had to sit in there. Thankfully a bunch of witnesses rushed to our aid, including a doctor and they were all amazing.

As soon as they could "drag" me out the passenger side I was loaded into an ambulance. Kathy and Kaylee had to wait for a 2nd ambulance. We got to see each other again after all our tests, close to 3 hours later.

I kind of feel like we got lucky, with not hitting him head on and having him hit the side of the front quarter. If we had hit head on or if he had hit my door, Kaylee's door, or the rear end I kind of fear those scenarios may have been worse.

Drive carefully everyone. We are all in very real danger every time we get out on the road. Have respect for the situation and the heavy steel objects flying by you at high speeds, piloted by the naturally flawed human species. Pay attention. Get off your devices, etc. Hug your loved ones. Make good decisions.

Cal Pierce Paul Gerard it did not. It pretty much went as I was expecting since we have had to fight that insurance company before and they tend to be the worst. But I couldn't help but have a sliver of hope in the back of my mind. They didn't present anything to make us or our lawyer lose any conviction to the case so we will keep pushing forward. It could be another 3 months or it could be another year.

Subject posted a reel of his daughter riding her bike. He comments that she hadn't kept up with riding due to the accident he and his wife weren't able to work with her because of their injuries. His daughter lost her confidence, and he is so happy that she was able to ride again after some coaching. Major achievement today. Fear overcome! With spending the past 3 years dealing with our injuries from the big car crash, I kinda dropped the ball as a dad and didn't keep Kaylee up on riding bikes the past few summers. So, Kathy and I weren't going to let another summer slip by. It was spring of 2024 when I pulled out her bike and she reminded me that she hadn't ridden in 2 years. I didn't even This really hit me because we had her on a Strider bike as soon as she could walk and we kept up on getting her bikes and encouraging her for like 6 years including going on bike rides as a family ... up until the car crash. She loved bike riding so I felt terrible for letting this happen. Well Kathy and I still each had a surgery to overcome in 2024, going into 2025 so we weren't able to address it last summer but we are finally feeling like we can ride again as a family so we went hunting today and Kaylee found a bike she liked at the Fort Collins Bike Co-op . It needed a little TLC (still does) but we got it working and per her request, we first started out by removing the pedals so she could just push with her feet and coast, like a Strider bike. After only a couple short cruises, she asked if she could try the pedals. I realize it . Of course her bike was too small and she had a little spill so she was instantly terrified of bikes and she wouldn't even discuss it with us for over a year.

Subject made a post of himself and his friends attending a railroad museum in their Star Wars gear. Subject is standing on the far right in the picture of 4 people. Our annual troop at the Colorado Model Railroad Museum in Greeley with the 501st Legion. Mountain Garrison and the Rebel Legion: Mountain Base was a good time and a great turnout. I am super happy to get out and troop again with Ed Litter , Devin Dyke , Liam Lee , Tyler Richards , Matt Banks , Becky McDaniel , and everyone else who made it. Unfortunately we did not get a group Pic this year but that is ok ☺ . We missed you Michelle Kempema but we hope today was awesome for you and your mom!

Subject posted that they were almost in another car accident. His wife, Kathy, was driving and was able to avoid another crash. They were both shaken after it happened, and he says they feel "hypervigilant." "Almost in another crash" ... That's what I almost stuck with as a post, because as we were going through an intersection over in Johnstown, another person started to pull out in front of us. Kathy had to swerve around them with no time to see if anyone was next to us. Thankfully they hit the breaks, unlike the guy in our big crash in 2022. If I had been driving I'm sure the universe would have made things play out differently. Both of us had to take some deep breaths after that. Talk about hypervigilance. So ... now I firmly believe that we (any of us) are "almost in a crash" every damned time we go out on the roads. People truly do not appreciate the very real danger they are in while on the road. I didnt think to look back and see if they had a yellow flashing arrow. I wouldn't be surprised if they did. I think those are a real problem.

Congrats on avoiding an accident.

It seems that more people drive poorly with little regard for others, which empowers others to drive badly. Essentially you end up with everyone driving like crap because everyone else is. If that's good justification, sign me up for a bus pass.

I don't like driving. Every road is the grand prix. Traffic signs and lines mean nothing. People cross the double yellow line to pass. I've seen so many people cross multiple lanes of traffic to make a last minute turn. It's just not safe anymore.

Subject posted that his family was having a get-together for his wife's birthday. People asked what they could get her, and he commented that a $10 bill would be great. It brings him nostalgia, and he also notes that it would help with the challenge of paying bills. We are having a get-together with good friends tomorrow, celebrating Kathy and a friend asked what to get her as a present. Well, in thinking about it (and I am not sure if she would feel the same) I realized that for me, if someone felt compelled to get 'me' something, as a birthday present or whatever, (while their presence makes me happy enough) ... I think I am at a point where a $10 bill would actually make me quite happy, as a gift.

I remember being a kid when a $10 bill was magical. So ... it would hold some nostalgic value ... plus ... with how challenging paying the bills seems to be these days, a $10 bill would seriously mean a lot. Not just as a gift but also in appreciating that someone could be willing and able to share ten dollars with someone else. See less

Subject is concerned that he will need additional surgery on his shoulder since he is still having a lot of pain after 1 year. Subject to have an MRI to determine if it is just inflammation or if he needs it to be repaired. I met with my shoulder surgeon today. He says I shouldn't be dealing with this much pain at 11 months out. I agreed since my right shoulder did pretty good at 11 months (a year ago). He wants another MRI to try and see what is going on. He hopes for just inflammation but is worried the repair didn't take and if it didn't we might have to try again. Woohoo. We will see I guess.

Subject posted that he is having problems with his dentures or clenching his teeth, resulting in TMJ and ear pain. He is requesting help from his friends on techniques to use until he can see his dentist. I think my denture (that I told them didn't seem to fit correctly over a year ago) may be giving me TMJ. It is like having 3 bad tooth infections along with an ear infection at the same time. My ear won't drain, except out into the ear. Tylenol and Advil (and heat) usually knocks it out but that seems to be less effective. Trying to accomplish things for the business, I haven't had time to go to the dentist ☺ Any exercise technique suggestions? My doctor said to watch for clenching, leaning on the jaw, and try to let my jaw relax. That helps some.

I can't believe your dentist never had you get a night guard. That's downright criminal because your clenching has destroyed your teeth. Having your dentist make one, it's $250. Trust me -- these work just as well, and you don't have to worry about losing them. You just put them into hot water then bite down on them, which then molds them to your bite.

Back to the shoulder surgery post-op lifestyle. Thankfully I have my dominant arm to get by with this time around but it hasn't exactly been easy and it will be several months before I can start using the left arm for basic tasks. PC work is largely one handed now except I am using this mini keypad for 3D modeling in Blender. Using the phone for posting updates isn't too bad so that is good. I just need to get to where I can sleep somewhat normally again... which could be a while yet. Still trying to sleep in the recliner which isn't easy, especially when the shoulder is angry 😢 5 more weeks in the sling and then hopefully things will start to get better.

In Return of the Jedi,
how could the Ewoks
have a dress that fit Leia...

unless they cooked
and ate a woman her size?
