Findings:

Over several years, Subject chronicled her health journey. On June 16, 2018, a GoFundMe was created for Subject and her son to help them with health issues. The GoFundMe was not found. On June 29, 2018, Subject's mother, Terry Kimball, shared a post asking if anyone had experience with toxic black mold and mentioned that Subject and her husband were having their home remediated and that Subject was sick. In July 2018, Terry Kimball shared a Facebook post with information from the GoFundMe. The post goes into detail about Subject's health, and mentions Subject going to California for stem cell treatment. The post also discussed mycotoxin poisoning and it was mentioned that Subject and her husband are "... genetically unable (due to the HLA gene) to detox endo and mycotoxins)." The post also mentioned the death of three pets and that Subject and her family were living in a camping trailer.

On August 4, 2018, Terry Kimball shared a post indicating that Subject and her family were back in their home and that their home was "... clear of the toxic black mold." Terry Kimball also indicated that Subject and her family would begin the remodeling process. Subject could be seen in posts with her family through 2019 and 2020. In January 2022, Subject posted in a Facebook group called "Healing from Toxic Mold Exposure."

In June 2023, Subject shared a post indicating she had "... been disabled from severe mold poisoning for 5 years...". In October 2023, Subject shared a status update regarding her roof and moving into a cabin owned by her friend, Kendra Miller, for 75 days due to issues with her home. Subject also discussed her health and her insurance company in this post. She mentions moving back home in April 2023 and having doctor appointments, tests, and decontaminating her home, which triggered reactions. Furthermore, Subject wrote about taking out a home equity line of credit, taking out all retirement, their rental home, savings, her income, and their safety. She wrote about this "...collectively resulting in damages of over $2M in remediation, remodeling, loss of income and medical costs...".

In February 2024, Subject posted about a sphenoid sinus infection with Aspergillus mold and strep. In July 2024, Subject mentioned 25 doctors, 18 new diagnoses, and future surgeries. She also said that she was gaslit by doctors.

In March 2025, Subject mentioned having a sinus surgery the previous summer. In this post, she also shared that she had "... all symptoms of atlas misalignment and genetic inhibited detox pathways causing dysautonomia, PoTS, MCAS and hEDS and susceptibility to biotoxin illness". Subject shared detailed information about four surgeries: Cranial CSF Leak Surgery, Jugular Vein DE-Compression Surgery, Sinus Surgery, and Eustachian Tube Balloon. She also wrote about being born with pigeon-feet, having frequent strep throat on the right side, and mitral valve prolapse due to hyper-mobility, causing heart valve instability. She had a 47-degree curve on her spine that required a 5-disc fusion when she was 15. Additionally, Subject wrote about 10+ years of stomach paralysis and had her gall bladder removed. Subject also mentioned having meningitis in her 20s. On March 21, 2025, Subject posted a detailed post about her health and her recent surgery. Subject's most recent Facebook post was in April 2025, when she reshared a post.

Several mentions of mold and health issues were preserved in this report. Mentions of insurance were also found.

Court and Property Records:

Subject's address, per Requestor, is 27199 Sun Ridge Dr, Evergreen, CO 80439. Subject was listed on the property records. Subject's most recent address history (2 years) was included in the report.

There were court records located for Subject. On January 29, 2000, Subject was listed as the defendant on a misdemeanor speeding charge for 21 mph over the posted speed. On June 5, 2020, she was listed as a plaintiff in a dispute against Steven Wilson. In November 2024, Koenig et al v. American Family Mutual Insurance Company, S.I. was filed.

KIMBALL LIGHTING

Terry Kimball has a background in the ski and travel industries. She worked for Colorado Ski Country for 12 years and in 2004 was introduced to the LED holiday lights. Seeing the potential in these energy-efficient lights, she started Kimball Lighting in 2006 and has built an extensive client list in Colorado. Kimball Lighting works with municipalities, resorts, hotels, shopping centers and also sells direct to the public. Kimball Lighting offers installation services as well. Let us help you to brighten your holidays, parties and special events!

WHY LED?

LEDs use only 2-10% of the energy of incandescent lights.

You will also save on maintenance and replacement costs.

COST SAVINGS

SAFER

LED lights do not get hot! They are fireproof, shatterproof, UL approved.

LONGEVITY

LED lights burn up to 100,000 hours.

WARRANTY

The Commercial and Standard Grade LED String Lights have a 1-year warranty.

My daughter and husband are having their home remediated, but because Carrie has been so sick her doctor is recommending that they literally get rid of everything in their home. Get a mold team in there. They can bleach everything out in a couple days. Then get a dehumidifier (and reverse for the winter) attached to the AC/furnace. Also check into the air sanitizers like AirDog. A couple of those units pull even mold, bacteria and other really small particles out of the air.

Where is the mold growing and what is the cause? Most times its in the bathrooms (always use the fan when showering or bathing). It grows where water sits stagnant. Often behind tile and walls. Remediation companies can easily detect it but they usually put holes in the walls to check. It can really affect your lungs if it's been there awhile. Praying for all of you..

Her functional health doctor can oversee options hoping Carrie has one. Can recommend CO MD expert if necessary.

I had miraculous healing but lungs still bothered with cleaners, mold, steamy weather here in Tx...

Sorry if I came on strong. It was such a horrific event and if the docs had thought to check for the mold, it could have been different. They just waited too long. So we find ourselves always cautioning folks. Even my son in Maryland. I worry as he has this passage way in his house that is earthen. It is so damp there. I ask him all the time to have someone check to see if they can somehow finish it off. On another note, if the docs have already thought to check on the mold, that is terrific. The abatement companies are so good about finding it if it is there. Again, my prayers to you all and keep us updated.

We are humbled beyond belief by it and frankly, it has transformed our hearts and spirits from being scared and sad, to being lifted up, encouraged and strong enough to fight. Thank you, thank you, thank you. I got back on Saturday from my stem cell treatment in California. It was so much harder than I thought it would be but I know that it will heal my body. The stem cells will meet the damaged cells in 5-9 weeks and take a year if not two, to repair damage. Neurological healing (which is my biggest symptom) starts at the 6-9 month mark. I found that the largest cause of my symptoms is from Mycotoxin poisoning (Mycotoxicosis:

<https://spoonielife.wordpress.com/.../mold-illness-websites-.../> which is what killed all 3 of my animals within months of each other this past year. Mycotoxins are released from mold. We found a ton of the most toxic black mold in our house (Stachybotrys) and had very high levels of mycotoxins in the house (Calvin and I have high levels in our blood). We are genetically unable (due to the HLA gene) to detox endo and mycotoxins). The exposure to the mold and mycotoxins brought down our immune systems (no wonder I have felt like I'm constantly sick over the past few years) which allowed the Lyme, Mycoplasma, Epstein-Barr and Baronella viruses to flourish and take over. We are living in our camping trailer in our driveway which is super fun with a toddler and a baby when you're not feeling well (though Grandma has watched the kids for a few nights) because our entire house has been gutted. Every floor on all 3 levels is gone with bathrooms ripped up, too. They fogged the house with a mycotoxin neutralizing fog and Todd is feverishly and meticulously wiping down every surface and every trinket in our house. We get the house re-tested today to see if we can get back in the house. I have learned so much through this process. I have learned that negative energy attracts negative energy and God is transforming our hearts and priorities so that we can stay positive and recognize how truly blessed we are, even in the eye of the storm. Again, we are eternally thankful for your fellowship, love and support. Thank you so much!"

A woman with long, light brown hair, wearing a dark, sleeveless top with a galaxy print, is smiling at the camera. She is holding a young girl in her arms. The young girl, with short blonde hair, is also smiling and holding a white and pink stuffed animal. They are in a kitchen setting. In the background, there is a dark wooden cabinet with a television on top, two windows showing greenery outside, and a refrigerator with some magnets and papers attached. A blue arrow icon is overlaid on the bottom right corner of the photo.

What Should I do with this Laundry Room wall:

This room had a ton of Stachybotrys mold growing behind the drywall. It is the only room in our house that butts up against earth as we have a home etched into the side of a mountain with a walkout basement.

This wall had a very high moisture content so we ran a dehumidifier all last summer which was picking up a full bucket every day. However it has not been picking up any water since about September and the color of the concrete is now much lighter. We are not sure though, if the moisture problem has been fixed or if in the summer it will become moist again possibly from our neighbors sprinkler head which is on a hill that leads right to this foundation wall or from rising aquifers or for whatever reason.

As part of my healing, I have a need to finish this room as it triggers a bit of PTSD every time I walk in it, but we are nervous to drywall again in case the moisture comes back next summer and the mold comes back.

I have also learned that the exterior of the foundation was never painted with tar or whatever the heck else you're supposed to paint it with to prevent moisture from coming in.

What would you do? I do know that for a walkout basement we should be using foam batting or spray foam with no moisture barrier so it was not built correctly in the first place but I'm still worried.

Should I be? Or should I just drywall it?

Or, are there other ideas like putting brick in there or a stone wall or something?

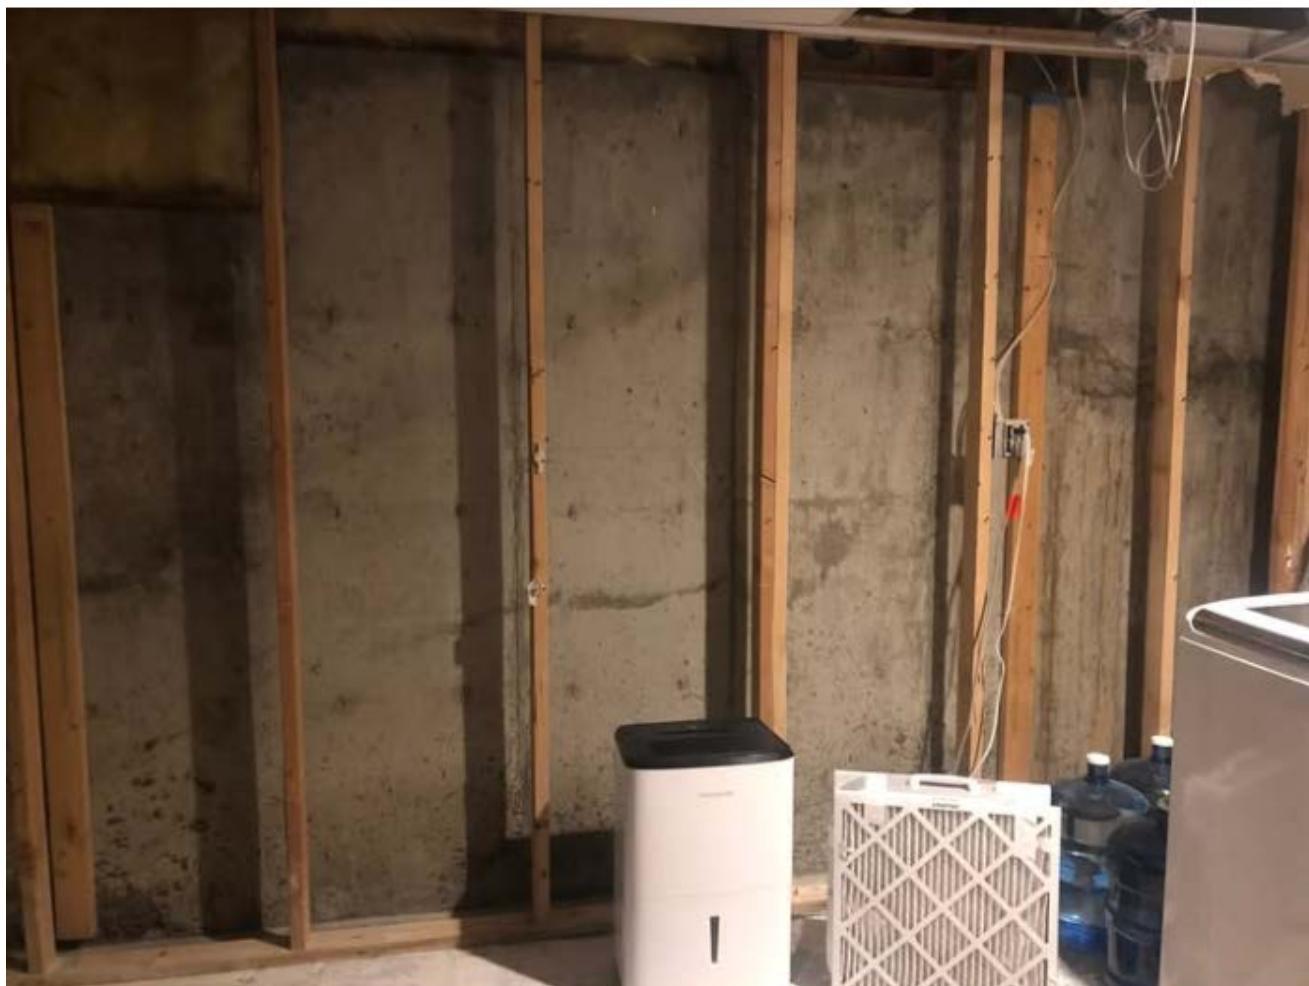

Thank you!!!

I have been told to leave it for a while and see if there is moisture next year. Then go rebuild your should look into sealing first and dealing with your moisture issue.

Ok we had the same problem it made me VERY VERY deathly sick and my daughter was very sick aswell but really we all were reacting horribly. So the problem is when a house is built like this on a rock or the earth it SWEATS.. Into the home.. Continues To have moisture. We had bad grading. So we used something called liquid rubber (I'll Insert a picture) but before we did that we had someone remediate to get as many mold partials and cytotoxins that black mold creates (which lowers your immune system) we had it remediated. And then after we proofed it.. So before you put the rubber you need to spray everything down on the wall cracks etc.. Beams.. Floor with hydrogen peroxide let it dry and COVER the wall and the earth part inside with the liquid rubber. And if you CAN Dig around the earth part and try to add some on that exterior wall. it dry and COVER the wall and the earth part inside with the liquid rubber. And if you CAN.. Dig around the earth part and try to add some on that exterior wall. We did not do that we then got a humidity reader and watched the readings for a while and adjusted the humidifier accordingly and once the liquid rubber dried we put all new insulation in and the walls. Fine so far!

The Phoenix: 1 of 9

Stripped bare. Forged in the fire. Nothing to hold onto, nothing to define me, just my soul and God... there with me in the darkness, holding me together through the pain.

In these depths, you dance with your soul and a beautiful painting of wisdom comes into focus.

The pain transmutes into deep, still rivers of empathy. The tears of grief water and grow the gift of compassion in your heart.

In the spiraling loss of control, the proof that you are being divinely held and guided emerges.

In the near-death, you discover the gratitude for even the mundane moments and in the dissolution of everything you worked so hard for, you are brought back to what you've always known. Your purpose. And so, you rise.

You step into your truth, fully embodied, joyful in the knowing that it all happened for you and that you will use it, to be a loving light along the path for others.

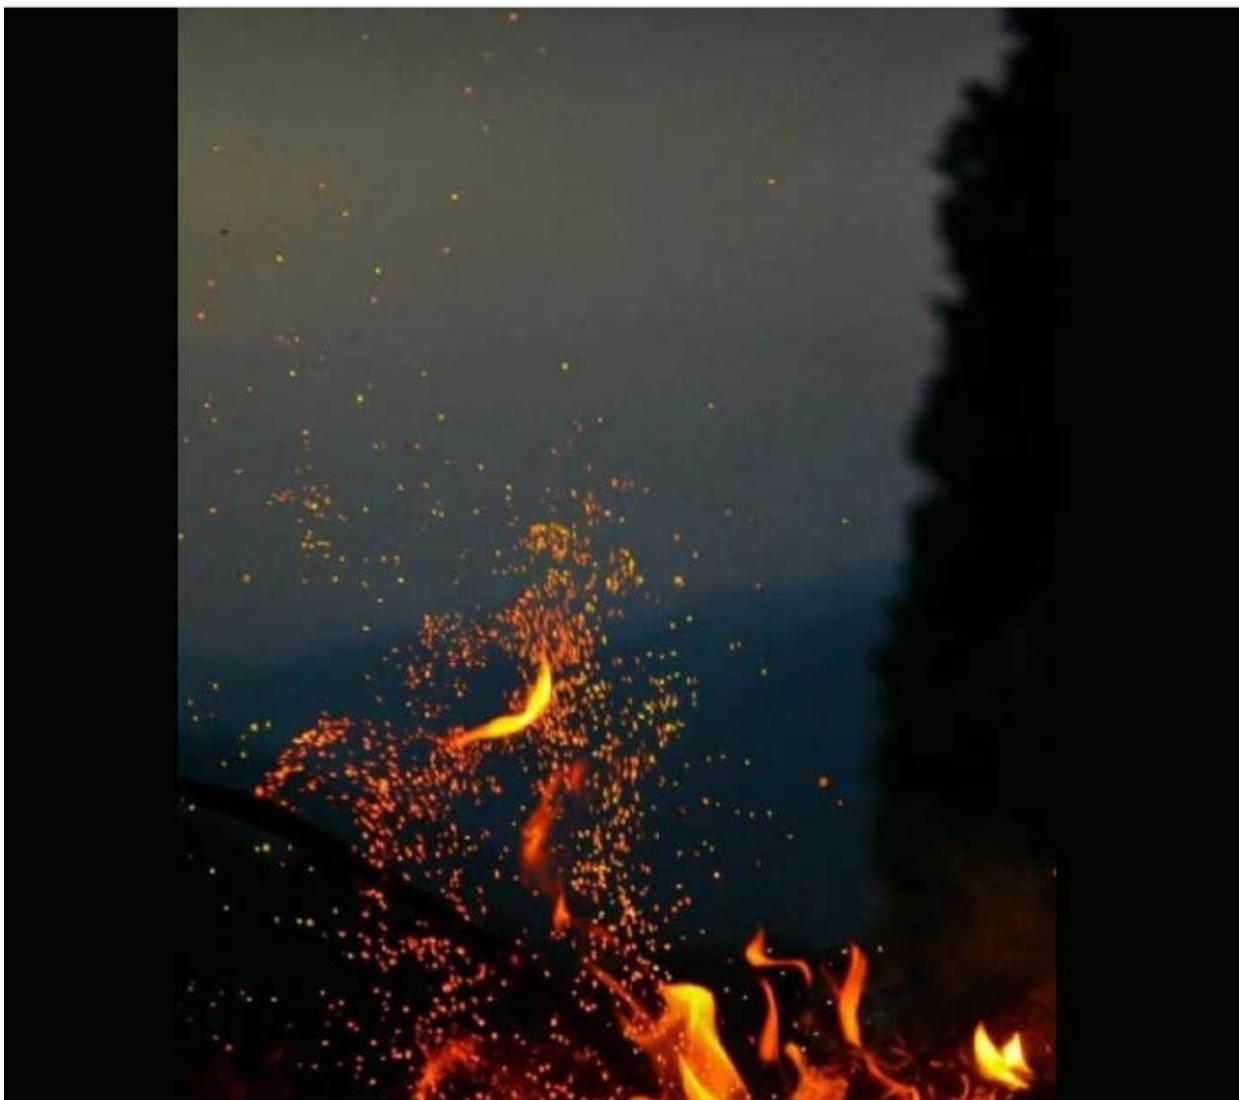

From the ashes, you rise – a Phoenix whose destiny was on the other side of the destruction. Thank you, God.

*Subject's most recent activity was writings about her childhood self and her soul "To the world, I was a scrappy Irish redhead with grit and determination. But in secret, I dated the nurturing, surrendering, magic girl who danced in my soul. She came out in poetry, in the car with the music on, hand and hair out the window...wind whipping, in the mountains around the fire drumming sparks up into the starry sky, into the bracelets I weave and the songs I sing. She was the magnetic one who lit a room with her love and energy, and she had been my muse, my greatest love. . She was a dreamer, a poet, an old soul with magic and fire from days long ago but as I began to feed the warrior within who stood at the ready to conquer and provide, her songs of surrender and grace muted. Drive and determination in a suit grew me into a leader, a speaker and a badass in the boardroom and while the gold was as shiny as the accolades, cracks grew into chasms, separating me further from her, as her light faded to black under a blanket of corporate gold. . The years of hustle and neglect a magnet for decay, descending, growing, taking over my home, my body, my mind, and my family. In the jet-black years of illness, in the dissolution of everything that defined me, I found respite in the only place left to shelter - my soul. . The warrior of will meant to provide and protect me had fallen; the gold hard-earned to keep me safe, now dissolved. Stripped bare, amid the rubble, the faint calling of the rose began to sing the distant songs of my soul once again. First, in a whisper and with each breath and every step closer to her angelic call, the magic began to grow, the tingling of my soul coursing through my veins bringing new life to dead limbs and the wisdom of my heart sustained me in the darkness. . The rose a reflection of me, reminding me to soften, slow, to bloom into my sweetness and to share it with the world, to fall in love with the romance of life once again and to surrender, to unfurl the petals I had walled to protect the pistil. And in the slow opening, held in the soft whisper of my soul's song, I began to trust once again and, in the brokenness, I found where the real magic lies."

*Mention of mold. "2023: The Year of our Deliverance When we ask God for deliverance, we may be asked to choose disciplined surrender and faith, as the darkness deepens around us when we were expecting the dawn. . The past 5 years have been the journey of a lifetime, now culminating into the most epic trial of both the wisdom and the awareness that I have developed while navigating the depths. . 2022 was going to be our year. We had been making progress in healing after ripping the last wall of mold from our home in April of 2021, but this Summer brought significant regression. Intense vertigo brought me to my knees and fear that I may not make it out of this chapter after all crept-in as I spiraled back down into the darkness. . As I walk this path, God reveals layers on all levels - body, mind, and spirit - that need to be healed, and this Summer demanded that I gain control of my mind and my feelings. We are created with the mind of God innately woven into the fabric of our being and yet I would often find myself engaging with thoughts that were not in accordance with myself or my creator. . The thoughts that I may not be there for my kids created feelings of fear which called more things to fear to me - because we're all essentially energetic antennas broadcasting a signal for an energetic match - boomeranging our emotions back to us with evidence to support them manifesting in our lives. . In October of this year, I began a new practice of fantasizing my dream life every night before sleep. Each night I would snuggle-in and begin creating images in my mind of my family healthy and experiencing the adventures of life. In the images I was conjuring, I felt emotions of abundance, freedom, bliss, excitement, desire and gratitude and something magical started happening. . My energy started changing; gratitude spilling over into the daylight. It started flooding my mind and I noticed that my inner dialogue about my experience was also evolving. Instead of taking well-worn mental paths, I started forging new trails into possibility, expectation, and sheer gratitude for everything I have in my life that is beautiful. . Life responds to emotions and expectation. With this practice, by feeling all the feelings as though they were already here, I started calling-in our deliverance. It began to unfold when two roofers showed up on our doorstep around Halloween, discovering two large holes in our roof. With this being the雨iest Summer that we could remember, we finally had answers as to why we were back-sliding and I nearly collapsed on our porch overrun by a mix of relief and overwhelm. . One night in prayer, God gave me a vision of a golden hand coming down, lifting the roof off our home, releasing black smoke into the ethers. It would require yet another loan, increasing the piles of debt but in trust and obedience, we did it. It was found that the roof was contaminated with mold due to the water intrusion and the bid to rip out the vaulted ceilings (let alone re-build them) left us breathless and overwhelmed as it feels financially impossible. . It's a fascinating experience to witness myself leading myself through this. Vacillating between old thoughts of trying to figure out the solution - how we will afford it...where we will go for the weeks that it's being done... and choosing every day to find rest in the not-knowing. That all I must do, is hold the vision, give thanks for the deliverance, and fall back into a trust fall once again. . While I don't have the answers yet - I have no idea the details of how we will be delivered into my vision of health and abundance - and I'm surrounded by evidence that the mountain feels insurmountable - I hold steadfast in my vision and trust that everything will turn out greater than we could possibly imagine and that the best years for our family are ahead of us. . In each moment, we have a choice to keep regurgitating our current reality, or to choose to begin creating a new one. If I start thinking about our situation too much, I feel myself slipping back into all the questions - the "how's" - and the panic begins to move through my body. These moments bringing me opportunity to re-align myself back to my vision, back to my center, back to the trust fall and as I fall, I am filled with the knowing that this is the deliverance, God whispering to my soul "trust me". "Rebecca Vohringerl know you know this road and the depths that are impossible to know unless you have navigated it firsthand. I am wrapping you in a huge hug. We will get through this. I know it. "Rebecca Vohringer I hear you. Kambo took my MCAS away for a good amount of time but you have to listen to your gut. I'm building up the courage to do it again." "Rebecca Vohringer Kambo is not psychedelic (that is some other kind of frog), it is purely a physical detox. It is full of peptides which are what heal you if you want to start researching peptides. Basically, it is anti-fungal, anti-bacterial, anti-inflammatory. It also re-sets your gut microbiome. It is the most amazing medicine out there in my experience but it is rough. You basically purge for about 20 minutes after the medicine is put on. I can send you more in a private message but it has been the most effective thing for me by far." "Donna LanniDonna, I love you so much. I wish I could come stay with you but our passports are expired. They take 10-12 weeks and we just can swing expediting them. I am so very grateful for your heart and for your friendship and I will look forward to visiting you one day On the bright side, I have hope that I'm going to actually get better now! It's been a very, very long 5 years of sickness. I can't wait to hug you again someday. I love you, love you, love you!" "Kendra Miller Kendra! I may have welled-up with tears reading this. Thank you so, so much. Truly, this is just amazing and I am so grateful. Our adjuster called us last night and approved our claim so they are going to put us up somewhere for a few months. Thank you again for reaching out and for your love, kindness and generosity. I am so grateful ☺☺"

2023: The Year of our Deliverance

When we ask God for deliverance, we may be asked to choose disciplined surrender and faith, as the darkness deepens around us when we were expecting the dawn.

The past 5 years have been the journey of a lifetime, now culminating into the most epic trial of both the wisdom and the awareness that I have developed while navigating the depths.

2022 was going to be our year. We had been making progress in healing after ripping the last wall of mold from our home in April of 2021, but this Summer brought significant regression. Intense vertigo brought me to my knees and fear that I may not make it out of this chapter after all crept-in as I spiraled back down into the darkness.

As I walk this path, God reveals layers on all levels - body, mind, and spirit – that need to be healed, and this Summer demanded that I gain control of my mind and my feelings. We are created with the mind of God innately woven into the fabric of our being and yet I would often find myself engaging with thoughts that were not in accordance with myself or my creator.

The thoughts that I may not be there for my kids created feelings of fear which called more things to fear to me - because we're all essentially energetic antennas broadcasting a signal for an energetic match – boomeranging our emotions back to us with evidence to support them manifesting in our lives.

In October of this year, I began a new practice of fantasizing my dream life every night before sleep. Each night I would snuggle-in and begin creating images in my mind of my family healthy and experiencing the adventures of life. In the images I was conjuring, I felt emotions of abundance, freedom, bliss, excitement, desire and gratitude and something magical started happening.

My energy started changing; gratitude spilling over into the daylight. It started flooding my mind and I noticed that my inner dialogue about my experience was also evolving. Instead of taking well-worn mental paths, I started forging new trails into possibility, expectation, and sheer gratitude for everything I have in my life that is beautiful.

5 years since it began, 47 days since we left, every day a choice to harvest the good or to unravel amid the chaos.

I wake in the cabin, panicked and out of breath, spinning in the still blackness of night.

Dancing on the knife edge of thought, aware that I must consciously choose the vision that I will weave into the fabric of expectation and realization.

Warm little feet press into me - searching for safety even while she sleeps - her touch magically dissipating the fear, filling my heart with the knowing that I'm the richest girl in the world.

In this moment...

I am fed.

"I feel the desire to put it into the universe that I will be at the show in Boulder this year. I have tickets...I get them every year, but for the past 5+ years, I have been too sick to go. I've been disabled from severe mold poisoning for 5 years and it's taken nearly everything from me. It's made my family very sick, cost me my career, all of my retirement and financial security - over $1.8M in lost income, remediation, remodeling and medical trying to heal our family. Most importantly, it's cost me my ability to live my life. All of the things I have loved my whole life like camping, trail running, snowboarding and seeing shows have evaporated. I have been obsessed with the dead for 30 years, since I was 15. I saw them in Denver in 94' before Jerry died and before I got sick, I never missed a show. The Dead have given me so much joy in my life and especially the past 5 years of being so sick that I thought I might die, the Dead have been a constant soundtrack as they have been for all of my life and have lifted my spirits in the darkest of times. As of late, I had been feeling a bit better and was feeling optimistic until the vertigo returned a few days ago. I really need this experience. To be able to go and enjoy the show. To have a glimmer of experiencing life and something I love so much once again. I'm just asking for prayers, good vibes and if you could just envision me there, dancing and smiling, I would sure appreciate it. Thank you! ☺

*Post regards Subject's health, insurance, and mold. It also includes photos of her home. "One year ago, when a stranger knocked on our door, we had no idea that their visit would propel us into the darkest year of our lives. . In the Summer of 2022, we bought a pool pass and proclaimed ourselves to be in "the year of the montage"; one where we would break free of the prison of illness that held us down in the isolated depths for so many years and begin living our lives. We took out a home equity line of credit as a safety net, so that we could move out of the financial strain that the last 5 years put on us, taking all our retirement, our rental home, our savings, my income, and all our safety, collectively resulting in damages of over $2M in remediation, remodeling, loss of income and medical costs trying to survive the darkness that had descended. . We fantasized about taking the kids camping, on road trips and bike rides, floating in lakes and spending nights around the fire and those few days and moments at the pool, sun hitting our faces, warming bodies on hot concrete, the sound of kids playing, filled my soul with the hope and expectation that we would recover. . But as the rains that seem to have lost their way from the Pacific Northwest drenched our mountain hamlet last Summer, everything began to distort and lose focus. First came the spiral of dizziness, floating on the waves in my brain. Then the world became wavy; paisley patterns dancing, straight lines waving, pine trees blurring. . In January, on Imogene's 5th birthday, just after we blew out her candles, I fell to the floor in a seizure – the world tilting and swirling, I would spend the next 5 months in the vice grip of vertigo, nystagmus, and stabbing liver pain while our entire world began to unravel around us. The kids would visit me in bed, coloring pictures of hearts to hang on the wall above me, stroking my hair, telling me that I am loved and that I will be ok while Todd maintained his unwavering care for me and the kids. . While our insurance company approved a $50k remediation to rip our entire roof and decking off and ceilings out, days before we were supposed to leave, they pulled our coverage leaving us nowhere to go. Saved by the grace of a high school friend (thank you Kendra Miller!) who let us stay in their cabin, we drove into the unknown for what would be 75-days of hardship before we would return home again. . Those days in the cabin were some of the hardest days of our lives. Fighting with insurance, undergoing a rigorous evaluation by social security, and trying to manage the remediation company and build-back, having to front nearly all of the project that would total $175,000 (depleting our HELOC) all while spinning and scared, and trying to homeschool our sick son while I was the sickest I'd ever been with crushing migraines, liver pain, inability to sleep, air hunger, night sweats and severe PTSD on top of the debilitating fatigue, bone pain, eye rashes and vision issues. . We moved back in April and for the past 6 months, have been navigating tons of Dr appts and tests, and decontaminating our home which has triggered severe reactions. In the perfect poetry that is my life, on the anniversary marking one year since the roofers knocked on our door, I got the results of the MRI of my brain and Ultrasound on my liver, confirming what I already knew, that my brain and liver had suffered severe distress and damage with lesions on my brain, ischemic changes in the brain and a hemangioma on my liver, along with advanced inflammation in the sphenoid sinus which may account for the recurring meningitis, neck pain and vertigo. . When I start to think about the results of the testing and what they could mean, I get a pang of fear in my belly. In my human mind, when trying to piece it together, the fear grows and moves me to dark places but when I move back into my heart and back into prayer, I am filled with the Holy Spirit knowing that God will lead me back to health, just like I have been led through the labyrinth for the past 6 years. . I have been making slow progress with daily infrared sauna, detoxing the kidney, lymph, and liver with homeopathy among many other things but the most powerful, has been God starting to deeply reveal all the things that I have carried throughout my life, percolating below the surface, like the insidious energy of the toxic mold hiding behind the walls, slowly poisoning us. . They say to get healthy and stay healthy, you must stop doing the thing that made you sick, and so begins the deep dive into the psychosomatics of my mind, body, and spirit. Pulling off the walls, to pull the poison out, my home a mirror, to me. . ☺Carrie Rose Koenig☺"

"Bryan Rosner Thank you for the kind delivery of this message. I hear you. For us, initially it was that we were sure we got it all and our house was ripped apart for years so how would we have sold it? Now, it's a matter of we have no money to move nor would we ever get approved for financing. Mostly though, I've just seen tons of people try to run from Mold and it just keeps showing up everywhere they go so they end up like fugitives on the run. What does that also leave for the people who would move in here? I always told God that I wouldn't want to sell our home until I was sure it was safe for the next family as there is no way I would knowingly allow this to happen to new owners like the previous owner did to us. I'm sure it's safe now as the kids and dogs have basically recovered and I'm making progress. But I hear you and I'm thankful for this Occam's razor observation. It's too bad we don't have something where a house could be torn down and condemned with the loan being forgiven to prevent people from offloading toxic houses onto unsuspecting people, passing the curse along. Lastly, I would leave you to ponder whether our physical home is a representation of our subconscious mind in that wherever we go, there we are. We can't outrun the energies that manifest into our reality. Dicey and triggering I'm sure but it's been my observation."

"Bryan Rosner I agree that a well remediated home would theoretically be safe for most and of course you disclose but how do you reconcile that we know that 25% of the population is susceptible and that most people don't know that? ☺" "Bryan Rosner I hear you. Let's build homes from wood and paper, seal them up so the don't breathe and run water through them ☺. One thing I will say is that if 90% of homes can make people with CIRS sick, even if we had left, how would we have found the needle in the haystack to find a safe house? It's just an intense journey no matter how you slice it as you know firsthand. I really appreciate how much info you put out and how much you help people. ☺" "Bryan Rosner I get it! When we do move, we will rent our place so that if a tenant ever had any inklings of an issue, they could move out. I bet we're so fun at dinner parties ☺" "Danyell Michaels Hi friend! He's so lucky to have you. Yes, I would say that your description matches what I experienced with the vision. The eye darting is called Nystagmus. I will upload pictures of what I'm currently taking. I am not doing any more Lyme, Bartonella or Babesia killers as I believe that infections are only active when we have a toxic cellular terrain (they mop up the toxins) and when I do killers, I flare really bad due to the endotoxins. So I'm on a detox-forward protocol and here is what has helped the dizziness the most: - Infrared sauna several times a week - NAET treatments. I just had my practitioner purge mold in the vestibularcochlear nerve. I got the brain swelling migraine for 11 days straight but when it broke, the dizziness is much better than it was and I hadn't had improvement in over a year! - I know that me and your son both get the recurring meningitis brain swelling and neck pain. I had an MRI (I would suggest he get one too without contrast of course) and it shows advanced inflammation in the sphenoid sinus. So if you look at sphenoid sinus infections (they are tucked waay back there right behind the eyes), it can cause meningitis, neck pain, vertigo and vision issues!!! So I'm going for a no-contrast CT scan and if they find infection, they want to suck it out in surgery. I did get some help working with a functional neurologist named Andrew Brodyn at Landmark Chiro in PA (he does video calls) and I always suggest working with my friend Adam Adam Padilla as he is a practitioner and healed himself as well so he gets it on a deep level and is very knowledgeable. I couldn't tolerate Cholestyramine so I was doing Quicksilver ultrabinder and also tried CellCore biotoxin binder and I've used TRS and PBX as well. Right now I'm on Heiltropfen zeolite powder that Adam got me into. It comes in different particle sizes so you can start large and not cross the BBB and then graduate to smaller particle size to go deeper. Always here to talk." Monolaurin and lysine are very good for viruses and I think Monolaurin is good for fungal too" "Natasha BraggWe are slowly making some progress since I had surgery for an infection near my brain. It takes a long time for the cranial nerves and the brain to heal" "Natasha Braggthank you! Surgery was in May. Before that, I spent hours a day in bed with vertigo for two years but since then, it's been slowly improving. I still have jugular vein compression which is what is causing the swelling in the brain and the atrophy, and may still need surgery for that - meeting with the surgeon on Tuesday" "Susie Clarke SaundersThank you! This is from last year so there are a few more recent posts. I've been thinking of you guys and have been meaning to reach out to see how she is doing. Yes, I am seeing him on Tuesday at 2:30! I need to decide if I'm going to have decompression surgery. I had major sinus surgery with him in May for a mold infection near my brain that had caused years of vertigo and sleep apnea and I'm seeing some improvements. I think cranial nerves take a long time to heal. Trying to determine if the brain swelling, atrophy in my brain and white matter hyperintensities is due to the intracranial hypertension due to jugular compression. How are you guys? I'll PM you. Wrapping you in a big hug." "Kelli HeplerThank you, Kelli! I'm making progress after surgery for infection near my brain that really messed up my brain, cranial nerves and vestibular system. I I am seeing some improvements and I have full faith that I will heal, just takes a long time I think. I love you and I'm sending you a huge hug." "Debbie Cardenas DooleyNo, it showed a little bit on brain MRI and then was blatantly clear on the non-contact CT scan of the sinus. I cannot believe I suffered for two entire years with an infection because the previous ENT didn't run a scan (and actually suggested that I get my vestibular system severed) ☺" "Sami WallingfordI did for years and I'm going back to it"

Danyell Michaels

Hello- I'm so sorry that your family has gone through this...I'm trying to help my 22 yo son. Can I ask you mention in the beginning @ the queens became wavy, paisley patterns ....

Can you please maybe give some more examples? My son says like it looks like an earthquake is going on around him everything is shaking

Or the outline of his vision looks like kaleidoscope...when he closes his eyes during the day his eyeballs move around so fast like as if he's in rem sleep. He also says it seems like he is teleporting everything around him moving fast or jumping back and forth in front of him. I wasn't sure of this was bartonella and Lyme brain or mold.

So your sentence of the vision really peaked my interested.

And are you taking cholsryrmine? Or welchel? What are you using to get the mold out of your body?

Any help appreciated

Susie Clarke Saunders Thank you! This is from last year so there are a few more recent posts. I've been thinking of you guys and have been meaning to reach out to see how she is doing.

Yes, I am seeing him on Tuesday at 2:30! I need to decide if I'm going to have decompression surgery.

I had major sinus surgery with him in May for a mold infection near my brain that had caused years of vertigo and sleep apnea and I'm seeing some improvements. I think cranial nerves take a long time to heal.

Trying to determine if the brain swelling, atrophy in my brain and white matter hyperintensities is due to the intracranial hypertension due to jugular compression.

How are you guys?

I'll PM you. Wrapping you in a big hug.

Kelli Hepler Thank you, Kelli! I'm making progress after surgery for infection near my brain that really messed up my brain, cranial nerves and vestibular system. Please remind me did your infection show on x-rays?

Carrie Rose Koenig

Debbie Cardenas Dooley No, it showed a little bit on brain MRI and then was blatantly clear on the non-contact CT scan of the sinus. I cannot believe I suffered for two entire years with an infection because the previous ENT didn't run a scan (and actually suggested that I get my vestibular system severed) 🤢

Hi!

I'm new here and I'm on year 6 of being disabled from severe mold poisoning and Lyme/co-infections.

Last year, I did a mineral test and rebalancing program that kicked off the worst 15 months of my life: Stabbing liver pain, insomnia, night sweats, diarrhea for months, dizziness, vertigo, nystagmus, eye rash, gasping for air, heart palpitations and insane PTSD. Like go into a crying panic attack due to startle response when a butterfly flew at me level of insane.

I know I'm mercury toxic as I swallowed a thermometer full of mercury as a kid and I tasted metal in my mouth the entire time. I also still have an amalgam.

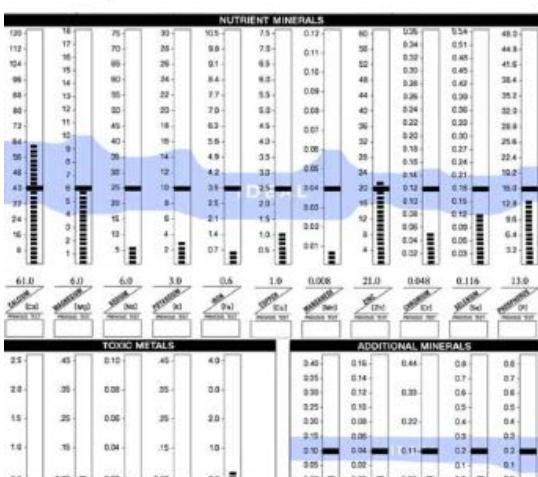

Anyhow, I think I need minerals as mold strips them but after what happened (I'm still not recovered to my crappy baseline), I'm scared.

I also don't have a gall bladder and cannot tolerate sulphur due to CBS gene.

Here is the hair test and the supplements, was it just too much? Did I get Vitamin A toxicity since I have mold?

I am at a cross roads as my Dr left. I either find another mold/lyme Dr and stay on that path, maybe I do mineral balancing?

Does anyone have recommendations or feedback? Thank you!

Have you tested your home water since the filter installment?

Also use this resource (Public Database) to see what's in your tap water before it enters into your house.

If you eat local produce, they are more than likely watering the "foods" with the same poisons you may be eating, you consider "clean."

John Caruso I guess I do live in Evergreen Colorado and we recently just had our water tested for copper and also recently had the filters changed in our aqua whole house, water filter

I think my issue is that I have mercury toxicity from swallowing a whole thermometer full as a kid and I also got severely poisoned by Mold. So I think I'm super deficient in minerals but when I got on the mineral protocol, it was way too much and I got very messed up for the last 15 months.

Carrie Rose Koenig- have your water tested on the 10 contaminants that exceed their guidelines.

See if your filters are filtering those listed.

You could be surprised!

For example:

Here is Sarasota, FL we have radioactive contaminates in our water 😱 which according to that same web site cause birth defects and cancer.

So sometimes we may think it was that freak accident that happened many moons ago, yet, our immune system is actually being compromised by something we wouldn't even think to check daily; even when we thought we got it covered. Make sense?

Now imagine eating out often, visiting that coffee/tea shop every morning... for those people the exposure is even higher.

Carrie Rose Koenig chelation is extremely hard on the body. What we do is much gentler, and Dr. Smith will not push you to take anything if it does not help you to start feeling better. He does not double down like a lot of other practitioners out there who let people suffer for years on end without changing strategies.

Carrie Rose Koenig's Post

If you're going to try anything to start healing, make sure you take it super slowly. Liver detox is not fun, but the progress you will make will give you hope as you continue to heal. I've been at this for 3 years. I started out being allergic to nearly everything and I felt so much better even just a month into the program. As long as you take it slowly, you will see small improvements very quickly. 3 years in now, I can enjoy foods that I couldn't even be in the same room with when I started. And I have energy and warmth. My thyroid function is almost back to normal without medications. Slow and steady wins the race!

Brittany Reyneke

Carrie Rose Koenig if mineral balancing is too hard on you at first, just shifting how you eat and reducing your toxin exposure will help immensely. This is the approach I had to take. It was only recently that I have been able to start tolerating some additional minerals on a consistent basis that Doctor Smith has recommended.

✨ Thank you, 2023: A Reflection ✨

The most challenging year of our lives - a masterful bookend to the baptism of unraveling that began in 2018 - proved to be no match for my moxie.

This was the year of our deliverance. And yet it did not come easy...the untangling of a complex web woven over 6 years, rife with twists and turns, sprinkled with bated breath.

This year was a battle that began at the end of a long journey, and at our most vulnerable.

Every obstacle attempted to entice us to dance in the depths of our deepest fears, and we were asked yet again to fight, when we yearned deeply for respite with the entirety of our beings.

A test of our wit, our adaptability, our resolve, and of our wisdom to cultivate and to remain steadfast in our personal power amidst the eye of the storm.

And in that personal power that we chose to hold, we rose and stood again for what was right - in our lawsuit, against our insurance company, for social security, to re-build our home and to demystify the spinning of my world in the vicegrip of vertigo.

God faithfully lead us, provided for us, connected us to the right people and held our swords as we slayed dragons that had toyed with us in the turmoil.

The ashes are settling and while the battlefield is barren, spinning and smoldering still, and with the dance of redemption on the horizon, we rejoice.

For we lead ourselves through, minds and hearts in tact, with resolve, discipline, trust, surrender, and inspired action that lit the labyrinth as we navigated the darkest void yet as a family.

We head into 2024 with a new fire in our belly, to architect and build every pixel back-up in a new template, to re-invent ourselves and to create our reality with a renewed focus on all of the possibility held within the blank canvass before us.

This is the year of our restoration and redemption. Arms linked, thoughts and hearts open wide to receive, knowing that the best is yet to come.

Are they doing one single surgery to fix these issues? I had one done in 2012 to fix a deviated septum, remove a concha bullosa, and supposedly widen the sinus openings. I started having issues again last year so went to same ENT. New scan showed infection in right maxillary sinus, but he told me it looked like only one sinus opening was widened at the last surgery. Anyway, I had balloon sinuplasty to open up the other openings and remove the infection. I was good for a while until about November. Sinus infection came back. I saw my allergist who ordered CT scan then sent me to ENT. Doctor said scan looked great, but when he did a nose/throat scope he could see lots of mucous. I had the RhinAer procedure done two weeks ago and still have infection. I hope your surgery goes well and helps! I can say since having the deviated septum fixed, I can breathe so much better.

Carrie Rose Koenig my experience with turbinates is that you ask them about Empty Nose Syndrome before you decide to do surgery. I know it's advised against, but that's if the dr takes the tissue out. My ENT was well aware of ENS and told me he's never had it happen bc he's conservative in how he approaches the turbinates. My 10 year old had turbinate reduction how he approaches the turbinates. My 10 year old had turbinate reduction about a year and a half ago and I had the same conversation with the surgeon about it. Same thing - he was aware of it, is conservative in approaching the turbinates, and has never had anyone have it. I agree ENS is an issue, but to me, it seems if you have a good surgeon aware of it, and discuss it with them, that will help you decide if it's a good fit. My surgery was fairly major - under for over 4 hours, and so far I have no regrets! It's been life changing and I hope it continues to stay that way 😊. But I 100% hear you on ENS bc that's so scary. My surgeon also said he's been helping people *with* ENS, so that was reassuring to me, also.

Mary Schaeffer This is great feedback. I will talk to my ENT about this. I appreciate you and I'm so excited that you're having such great results. YAY!

Carrie Rose Koenig thank you!! Definitely talk to him about it. If he's clueless - go somewhere else 😅. But I doubt that's the case. Idk what country you're in, but most good US doctors are aware of it (at least in my experience).

Yes and no. Surgery helped a lot but I kept getting infections. Found out I have a rare immune disease and my body actually can't fight off like anything on its own. Surgery was still worth it. I stopped getting daily migraines and I could actually breathe at night when I slept

I felt better with removal of the infection surgically but I didn't need anything else done besides to get it cleaned out. My sphenoid looked just like yours. It created so many many problems for me. Still not normal but infection is gone.

Amber Brown Are you able to give me a few examples of some of the symptoms that got better? So many people tell me that my symptoms cannot be from this infection and I think that they are wrong.

Things like dizziness, vertigo, terrible headaches, and neck pain as examples.

I'm so glad you are better, but do you have any idea why you're not fully better?

I'm able to function most of the time but I still feel off balance to the right and pain on my right temple on and off. My infection was in right sphenoid. I have had neck pain, muscle pain, and joint pain. I do get occasional face numbness and I think I have developed POTS as well and in process of getting tested.

What test did they give you to determine this? Was this a complete brain scan MRI or just a sinus CT scan? I'm curious because I'm having issues with a pain on my skull that feels tender when I touch it it's at the same spot every day and the right side of the skull

Some of the strongest elements on Earth are born from such intensity, one would surmise they would break, if we didn't know better.

Diamonds forged by pressure and heat, iron by fire and blows.

Two years ago, I was pulled to the deepest depths where only the one-eyed sea creatures mingle. The sun light dancing its muted warmth in wavy patterns far above, suspended animation holding me fast, while life happens somewhere out there, in the ethers.

The impression of my body neatly-etched into my couch, eyes closed, world spinning, white coats, revolving doors, peddling drugs with no answers, until God laid a golden road, brick by brick, to his best-and-brightest who have parted the seas. 25 doctors, 18 new diagnoses, more surgery on the horizon, edification surpassing fear.

Yet the road to the wise ones wasn't navigated with compass and map. It was a twisted labyrinth requiring me to remain decidedly steadfast in my resolve and sovereign over my body.

I flowed like a river beyond where I used to lose hope at the feet of Dr.'s who gaslit me, to those who were destined to shine the light of their craft into the deep sea of symptoms that held me suspended in a void of nothingness.

The past two years have sculpted me through pressure, heat and blows. Morphed me into a completely new being through the process of unraveling and reclamation.

My resolve forged of iron, unwavering in my grit, and my mind pressed into a diamond, strong and clear in my vision, un-marred by outside forces.

My deepest desire has always been to live a life of depth, of meaning, of purpose. A life filled with philosophy, poetry, growth and love. Surrounded by people who are actively evolving into the best version of themselves, living their passion and purpose.

I've had a vision of my life since I was born. I know that I am meant for a life of health, wealth, community, travel, and adventure, and I know that I am meant to lead, to walk others through transformation, and back to their power.

While my vision feels like the muted warmth of the sun dancing far above me while I swim in the deep, I know I will rise to bask in the sun, leveraging the wisdom cultivated in the darkness to serve.

*Post about health and mold. "As I bid adieu to the year that illuminated the deep, penetrating down to where myriad medical enigmas held me, a sense of hope and liberation permeates every cell, leaving me buzzing with excitement at the prospect of what my future holds. . In the spirit of potentially helping others, and in the energy of bringing closure to this chapter for myself, I am sharing some of the revelations as I set my eyes on my future, and step into a new era of reclamation. . In the Spring of 2022, a glimmer of light and life began to shine through the 5-year chrysalis of healing from mold poisoning, and we took the kids to Glenwood Hot Springs. Unaware of how mast cell activation can turn your connective and soft tissues to taffy, I dove off the diving board and scorpions my neck and spine. When I came up, my vision was spinning in a whirl, akin to the kaleidoscope of those mid-nineties Fruitopia commercials. . For 2.5 years, I've been held in a vortex of vertigo, spinning my world right round like a record baby, no one able to untangle the mystery of the tilt-a-whirl my life had become. . The neurologist who I waited 6 months to see, scoffing at my insistence that my brain was swelling and that I was developing dementia, refusing the NeuroQuant MRI, trying to pedal me her drugs instead. . The ENT, un-phased by the MRI results showing fluid in the Sphenoid sinus, laughing at my research showing that this could cause disturbance to the vestibular and visual processing centers, suggesting that I simply "sever my vestibular system all together", because, you know, "that should do it.". . My relentless pursuit of the truth, landing me at the feet of an affable, unassuming genius - a self-proclaimed instrument of the divine - Dr. Hepworth, who solved every riddle in the first 5-minutes of meeting him: . My jugular vein compressed, rendering me - as he hilariously calls it, "septically frustrated". With the jugular unable to return blood from the head to the heart, the blood and trapped CSF builds pressure, causing severe headaches, blood flow changes, and poisoning of the brain, leading to swelling, atrophy and cell death. Essentially, toilet brain. . My vagus nerve (which runs the autonomic nervous system), is pinched, causing wild fluctuations in heart rate and breathing, jolting me awake with heart-racing, gasping for air, triggering the complete meltdown of my nervous system causing C-PTSD, insomnia, digestive issues and fatigue. . The cherry on top, a severe Aspergillus mold and strep infection in the sphenoid sinus, attacking my visual system and cranial nerves, triggering rapid eye movement, resulting in vertigo...a rare (2%) serious infection with potentially catastrophic consequences, requiring surgery. . Further testing confirmed everything I had been explaining to white coats and clip boards for years: -Vestibular testing showed my balance system was shot. -Eye testing revealed nystagmus, bi-nocular vision and convergence insufficiency, my eyes unable to work in concert, scrambling my vision. -The NeuroQuant MRI that the neurologist refused, showed brain swelling in every area of the brain, blood flow changes (ischemia), white matter hyper-intensities and atrophy in the caudate nucleus which processes visual movement. -The Atlas Orthogonal chiropractor found atlantoaxial subluxation, misalignment in the key cervical junction that runs everything that feeds the brain through it, pinching off critical systems, causing disruption in flow. -The Spine Dr finding a potential CSF leak and likely needed disc replacement between C5/C6 Major sinus surgery this past Summer found that I had 40% breathing capacity on only one side, due to swollen turbinate's, bone spurs, deviated septum and a walled-off sphenoid cavity carrying severe infection, all causing oxygen deprivation to the brain and massive inflammation and atrophy. . It's only been a few months since the vertigo has lessened. My brain, eyes, cranial nerves, and vestibular system still mending the rubble that the tornado of infection left in its wake.

My outer vision sometimes still wavy, my balance often still wobbly, my internal compass still seasick on a boat some days. . I still have a long way to go, and the horizon still likely holds jugular decompression surgery this Spring, potentially rendering me 'that cool girl on the internet with the wicked neck scar', TBD. . After 7 years of illness, I am claiming year 1 of regeneration and reclamation. Reclaiming the beauty and wisdom that God cultivated for me to share with the world, moving from the darkness of isolation, to building a community of heart-lead philosophers and lighthouses that beckon others to the shores of respite from the stormy seas, re-igniting the life force within. . Every day, I focus on creating small ways to expand my freedom and capability, building evidence of the future that I am calling in by feeling, believing and acting from the space of my future self - healing, happy, and dancing through life. . As I reflect on the life of adventure I had before I got sick, I am filled with the energy of remembrance of how richly I have lived, and I cast the line of this energy into the field of potentiality, calling in an even brighter second half of my life, with many more adventures to come. Thank you for the 7-year incubator, God. Mid-life glow-up commence." "Carrie JohnsonIt's really just an explanation of what happened to my spine. I didn't mention the Lyme but for years, we thought I had Advaned Neurological Lyme, Bartonella, Babesia and EBV. Those infections are there, but it's due to the mold. Mold tanks the immune system and also the mitochondria which disables the cell from taking oxygen in or kicking toxins out, creating a toxic cellular terrain with cells in cell danger response. It creates a bog like terrain and the bugs are there to mop up the toxins to keep us alive. I would bet nearly anything that the underlying issue is mold poisoning, especially if your son is affected too. Mold causes mast cell activation which degrades connective and soft tissues and causes chronic inflammatory response syndrome which causes systemic inflammation. Inflammation and loss connective tissue causes instability and compressions. Have you done a mycotoxin urine test or the my Myco blood lab antigen test? Or tested your house with the ERMI test? The ERMI test for your house is the place to start because if it's hot, you can start detoxing the mycotoxins. Toxic mold produces toxic chemicals called mycotoxins and they poison the body so anyone who has mold illness, also has infections like Lyme and Co activate. We have to ask ourselves, why is our body not fighting it off especially when you likely have taken antibiotics or herbal tinctures to kill the pathogens. The answer is due to systemic toxicity from mycotoxins, pesticides, chemicals, and heavy metals in my experience. I'm wrapping you in a big hug and we are always here if you ever need a local friend who understands. My kids got very sick too and are just starting to get better. I have a 10-year-old and an almost 7-year-old." "Erik Nelson The first exposure I had to this idea was when I discovered German New

As I bid adieu to the year that illuminated the deep, penetrating down to where myriad medical enigmas held me, a sense of hope and liberation permeates every cell, leaving me buzzing with excitement at the prospect of what my future holds.

In the spirit of potentially helping others, and in the energy of bringing closure to this chapter for myself, I am sharing some of the revelations as I set my eyes on my future, and step into a new era of reclamation.

In the Spring of 2022, a glimmer of light and life began to shine through the 5-year chrysalis of healing from mold poisoning, and we took the kids to Glenwood Hot Springs. Unaware of how mast cell activation can turn your connective and soft tissues to taffy, I dove off the diving board and scorpioned my neck and spine. When I came up, my vision was spinning in a whirl, akin to the kaleidoscope of those mid-nineties Fruitopia commercials.

For 2.5 years, I've been held in a vortex of vertigo, spinning my world right round like a record baby, no one able to untangle the mystery of the tilt-a-whirl my life had become.

The neurologist who I waited 6 months to see, scoffing at my insistence that my brain was swelling and that I was developing dementia, refusing the NeuroQuant MRI, trying to pedal me her drugs instead.

The ENT, un-phased by the MRI results showing fluid in the Sphenoid sinus, laughing at my research showing that this could cause disturbance to the vestibular and visual processing centers, suggesting that I simply "sever my vestibular system all together", because, you know, "that should do it.".

My relentless pursuit of the truth, landing me at the feet of an affable, unassuming genius – a self-proclaimed instrument of the divine – Dr. Hepworth, who solved every riddle in the first 5-minutes of meeting him:

My jugular vein compressed, rendering me – as he hilariously calls it, "septically frustrated". For the sinuses, I needed surgery because I had many things that were blocking drainage so any infection couldn't be cleared.

For the compression: decompression surgery. If Eagles syndrome (elongated styloid strangling the jugular), they simply remove it, sometimes they find old lymph nodes nodes that had been infected and are now scarred etc.

Carrie-

I don't know you, but we share the exact same story. I share every aspect of your story, except for a major CSF leak repair needed, and Lyme instead of mold. Also- two surgeries for Tarlov cyst disease caused by IIH and weak dura.

Currently awaiting surgery for bilateral jugular vein compression (with C1 shave). My son had surgery scheduled with Dr Hepworth in April (he has bilateral IJVC due to elongated sphenoids).

Wishing you the best in your journey.

Danyell Michaels if you can come to Colorado, you want to see Dr Hepworth for jugular vein compression but he also assesses for cranial CSF leaks and all sorts of other things too! People travel from all over the world to see him.

I'd love to see who Tatiana went to for CSF assessment but I saw Dr Callen at UC Health in Denver who is one of the leading national people.

You also have Centenno Schultz clinic here in Colorado and they can assess for cervical spine instability. They can even do telehealth with a supine MRI.

In Boulder, there is also Dr Katz who does digital motion X-rays so lots of opportunity in CO but Dr Hepworth is who I would see hands down.

Have you been for atlas orthogonal assessment of the cervical junction?

The first exposure I had to this idea was when I discovered German New Medicine and the 5 Biological Laws. When we experience unexpected shocks in our life, based on our emotional response to those shocks, our body begins a biological process.

They believe that we are one with all organisms and that our bodies will work with organisms to help break down the conflict.

An example would be experiencing a death fright where you think you're going to die. The body will start generating expanded lung tissue to expand your ability to breathe. When the death fright passes and the extra tissue is no longer needed, organisms will come in, to destroy and break down the excess tissue. If you had a scan, the scan would reveal a tumor which would be the expanded tissue and you would be diagnosed with lung cancer when really it is just a natural process. It is a fascinating study and you can actually see the impacts of the shocks/conflicts on brain scans, but it certainly asks us to surrender everything we think we know about the body and what makes us "sick", let alone, what "sickness" actually is.

The journey back to health and wholeness is a journey back to our heart.

The return to the truth of our soul.

The disintegration of the false archetypes we cocooned ourselves within.

The integration of the parts of us that we had rejected in the past.

True health begins with love, grace, compassion, and forgiveness for yourself.

Welcoming back fractured pieces that we left in our wake, allowing us to move toward the brightness and warmth of our future – restored to wholeness, to the pure divinity within us, the blank canvass of potentiality awaiting the brush strokes of our next creation.

These stream-of-conscious reflections of my 45-years of lived experience, brought forth pieces that were calling for forgiveness, whether a fleeting season, or a paradigm that carved deep grooves of flow through my life.

I am releasing it all as I look out the front windshield, channeling the vision of my hand out the window, sun beating down, hair whipping in the wind, belting my favorite song, heading into the adventure of my future, free from the distortions of the past.

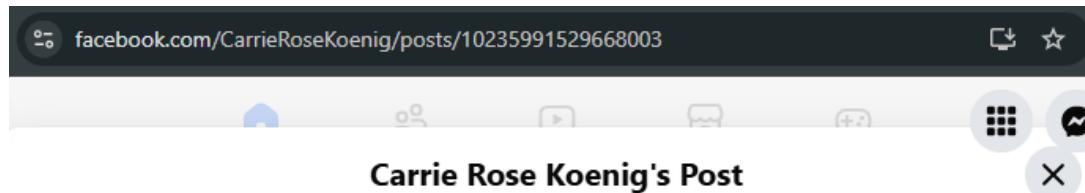

Forgiveness and the Hawaiian Ho'oponopono prayer:

Carrie, I'm sorry, please forgive me, thank you, I love you.

I forgive you for all that time that you hid your depth and the poetry that has burned in your soul since strawberry-blonde pigtails framed freckled cheeks.

I forgive you for the moments you were serenaded by the illusion that you weren't good enough, that you didn't belong, and possibly never would.

I forgive you for those old stories of how we couldn't take up space, or dare to bare our soul, simply to bask in the beauty of full expression.

I forgive you that you felt dirty and disconnected from the divine love that God created you from, because of that terrible thing that he did to you, and I forgive you for carrying the distorted belief for all that time - that you were to blame.

I forgive you for those years that you blamed yourself for the loss of your sweet baby girl.

I forgive you for when you chose to work yourself so far past your capacity, that you started to be blind to the simple beauty of existence.

I forgive you for those times when you ignored the wisdom of your body, allowing your mind to gaslight amid a storm within, for pressing on, pulling the last brick that would crumble the tower.

*Post about health. "Last Summer I had major sinus surgery, and 4 months later, the vertigo that spun my world for the past several years disappeared! From September 5 – January 13th, I was semi-functional, for the first time in years. . I moved my legs and expanded my lungs on little hikes among the Evergreens, I tasted warm food amid conversation and laughter while out to eat, we took the kids to the holiday walk for the first time ever, we decorated cookies, we danced under disco lights with crazy hats and glasses amid homemade toffee breaks with the kids on NYE, , and the take-back of my life, culminated in me seeing Shakedown Street at the Little Bear, my first time out in 3 years. Albeit slow and small, I basked in the taste of what it was like, to come back to life. . I cried tears of gratitude, and I started to plan things. Maybe I could have friends again, maybe I could trail run again, maybe I could snowboard, or grow a garden again, maybe I could launch a business, maybe I could experience life with my kids. I started to dream of a future again, envisioning the 7-years of the destruction of our health and finances due to toxic mold poisoning in the rear-view. . But the day after a I posted my beacon of hope on Facebook, I blew my nose, a blood clot came out, and the vertigo, eye rash, nystagmus, convergence insufficiency, binocular vision, hearing loss, neck pain and dizziness came flooding back in an instant. . While I spun in bed, I did not allow myself to be leveled. I maintained my vision of reclamation. I held the conviction that I would solve the mystery. I used medical AI to vet the threads of my instincts, I felt the mysticism, and applied logic, and I followed breadcrumb to breadcrumb, along the golden brick road to the answers I was seeking. . In the hands of an osteopath, who found that my occiput and temporal bones were twisted inward, compressing my brain stem. . To Michael Hane, who found that I had Atlas (C1 vertebrae - how your skull connects to your spine) dislocation (likely from birth, made acute from the diving board accident), compressing vital veins and nerves, in an area called "The Mouth of God", the alleged meeting point between the physical and spiritual world - the Seat of the Soul, sending us on a road trip to have his treatment to re-set the Atlantoaxial joint, meeting him in Santa Fe. . Finally, back to the discerning eye of Dr. Hepworth, the first Doctor ever who didn't scoff at me and try to put me on Prozac when I told him that my brain was swelling. Instead, he looked me square in the eyes and said, "I believe you, I know what this is, and I will not leave your side until we get you better." . On Wednesday this past week, as I lay on the bench at the Dr's office spinning, I learned that my instincts to insist on another CT were right, as it revealed a logical explanation for all these symptoms, and we reviewed the complex surgery that will give me my life back. . On March 10, I will lay on a cold steel table, under bright lights and the skill of an affable genius who will reconstruct me in a complex vein, skull and sinus surgery that carries risks of damage to cranial nerves, but when you're holding at 17 in Blackjack and you're set on a win, you ask the dealer to hit. . It's a complex procedure and many times, he is performing one, maybe two of these at one time, but he is a self-proclaimed instrument of the divine, and he is sure that I can handle all 4 of these at once: . Cranial CSF Leak Surgery: I have holes in my skull (!!), that are allowing cerebrospinal fluid to leak into my eyes which is what is causing the vertigo, nystagmus and vision issues that have spun me right round', baby, right round' for 3 years! I suspected this in my research, which is why I insisted on a CT scan. . Jugular Vein De-Compression Surgery: The jugular vein (like the Wu Tang Clan - also nothing to f*%k with), returns blood from the head to the heart, and mine is blocked on the right, which causes intracranial hypertension (horrible pressure headaches) as the blood builds with nowhere to go. It also prevents toxic cerebrospinal fluid from leaving the brains detox

(glymphatic) system, holding toxic CSF fluid against the brain, causing neuron death, brain fog and cognitive decline (that the “neurologist” assured me I could not possibly be experiencing). In surgery, he will cut my neck open and run the length of the jugular vein to unblock anything preventing flow. He may have to shave my vertebrae, cut elongated styloid bones, remove diseased lymph nodes from the meningitis in my 20’s, or untangle cranial nerves which can result in nerve impairment for up to a year impacting swallowing, talking, moving your face, head and arm, but when you have no quality of life, you make bets in perfect faith that God rewards bravery. . Sinus Surgery: Structural issues are causing oxygen deprivation in the brain and are preventing drainage to boot requiring my Turbinates to be re-sectioned, and my septum to be corrected. . Eustachian Tube Balloon: Due to all the pressure and fluid, my tube doesn’t function which has disabled my vestibular system, so he will balloon it back open. . It’s interesting looking back on my life, I can see how my body has been trying to show me these things for years – all symptoms of atlas misalignment and genetic inhibited detox pathways causing dysautonomia, PoTS, MCAS and hEDS and susceptibility to biotoxin illness. . -I was born with pigeon-feet, and had frequent strep throat on the right side, along with Mitral Valve prolapse due to hyper-mobility causing heart valve instability -The 47- degree curve of my spine that required a 5-disc fusion when I was 15 -The 10+ years of stomach paralysis and the paralysis and removal of my gall bladder that mystified doctors, no one bothering to look at the function of the vagus nerve that runs digestion -The genetics that hinder my ability to detox heavy metals (MTHFR) and disable my ability to detox biotoxins (HLA-DR genes), causing damage to the mitochondria, creating cell danger response and mast cell activation which degrades connective tissue. . As I recover from surgery, I will continue to construct my future by imagining that the best is yet to come: -I will write my book (I've already started!) -I will be running the trails of my backyard mountains this Summer, heart pumping, feet flying over Earth. -I will be dancing to great music. -I will launch a podcast, because boy, do I have some stories of magic to share. -I will launch a coaching business leveraging all my executive experience and the wisdom I have gained in the dismantling, to walk others back to their power. -I will find a group of friends who are on a path of personal development and authenticity and who love to explore this beautiful world, see great music, and have adventures. -I will plug into my community and create relationships for myself and our kids. It's funny because it's been there, all along. The head tilt, my right eye a bit higher than the left, the 60% hearing loss in my right ear, the digestive issues, the shortness of breath and the level 11 pain at the base of my skull. . The signs whispering, from the functional neurologist who told me that I had some sort of blockage on the right and who noticed my misaligned eye - why I always watched tv with my head turned as a kid. . The naturopath who told me that a "tree fell in my river, blocking flow". . Even my own backyard, on the side of the mountain in Evergreen, a mirror to my internal landscape. For years, runoff waters sprouted growth between the sandstone patio matrix, dirt covered the sinking corners of the pathway stones, muddy dog prints decorated our white hexagon kitchen tile floor, and rain always sent us into a tizzy, until we paid a landscaper to sculpt the land, channeling waters to where they should be, leaving a pristine, pressed cement patio, allowing our nervous systems a sign of relief. My backyard, now perfect, no matter the weather, a premonition of what is to come. Let the landscaping commence." "Joel Zeiner Thank you friend! I even had Ophelia's and Boulder Theater on my calendar but I'm sure I'll be up and dancing again soon to your amazing talent! Thanks for giving me one of the best nights in years at the Little Bear." "Melissa Koch Formby Thank you, Melissa and thank you for your prayers. Your words moved me deeply as I have felt like a failure to my kids. I used to be successful, active and fun but God has shown me that now I'm deeply present, with higher wisdom and empathy and that this, is the gift I get to give my kids. We are all so close from going through the thick of it the past 7 years and I am so grateful for it, even though it's been very hard." "Jess Ferrigno Thank you! Feel free to PM me as well but as a baseline, I would test your body for mycotoxins with a urine test and do a hair mineral analysis for heavy metals. So many symptoms these days are due to genetic inhibited detox pathways causing systemic toxicity (chemicals, mycotoxins, pesticides, metals). I'd meet with a naturopath and also take this test to see if you have Chronic Inflammatory Response: www.VCSTest.com" "Jess Ferrigno Also sharing this in case any of this resonates: <https://youtu.be/JTfo06YeTOM> Toxicity though is such a huge component as it leaves the body in cell danger response with mitochondrial impact and affects all 11 systems of the body. Also look into Atlas subluxation. So you could go to an Atlas Orthogonal chiropractor and they will take details x-rays of the craniocervical junction - atlas and axis. Or call Michael Hane who does a one-time re-seating of the atlas joint called Atlas Activation. Atlas issues can cause mast cell activation which causes inflammation and connective tissue erosion, and dysautonomia which impacts the autonomic nervous system impacting breathing, digestion and heart. Feel free to reach out any time. PS: I'm telling you, medical AI has given me so many answers." "Neysha Moore Hi! Girl, this is intracranial hypertension from vascular compression. It could also be sinus as well. I had two ENT's tell me my sinuses were fine when I in fact had an insane infection in the sphenoid and all sorts of drainage issues that were creating sleep apnea! See if you can come to Denver to see Dr Hepworth. He specializes in sinuses and these compressions along with cranial CSF leaks which could cause what you're describing too. I had a jugular ultrasound with the Eagles Protocol to determine the compression. Basically, they measure it "normal" , then make you "bare down" and squeeze everything and then measure again as that creates inflammation. The CT (I always refuse contrast) is what showed the sinus issues and the cranial leak. I know way too much about this and I'm happy to help you in any way I can so always feel free to reach out. I'll post you a little video about jugular vein compression (which in an of itself can even cause cranial leaks)." "Neysha Moore MRI can show a small portion of the sinus, just a bit of the sphenoid which is where I had fluid/infection. Are you on good mast cell support? Ketotifen helps us a lot. MCAS, hEDS and PoTS are all related and typically are rooted in things like Atlas dislocation which compresses the Vagus nerve causing dysautonomia resulting in the shortness of breath, PoTS and even MCAS. Jugular compression can cause this as well which can be caused by elongated styloid bones that can be trimmed. I would also test for mold, like stat if you haven't yet. The ERMI dust test is the way to go (happy to explain why I think that) and testing your urine for mycotoxins." "For the sinuses, you really want a non-contrast CT scan and for Dr Hepworth in Colorado to read it if you can get in with him. He treats all the vascular stuff too but yes, sinuses can also cause sleep apnea. I had 3 ENT Dr's tell me I had no problem with my sinuses when I had enlarged turbinates with air bubbles and filled with fluid, bone spur, deviated septum and walled-off sphenoid full of infection! ...

Last Summer I had major sinus surgery, and 4 months later, the vertigo that spun my world for the past several years disappeared! From September 5 – January 13th, I was semi-functional, for the first time in years.

I moved my legs and expanded my lungs on little hikes among the Evergreens, I tasted warm food amid conversation and laughter while out to eat, we took the kids to the holiday walk for the first time ever, we decorated cookies, we danced under disco lights with crazy hats and glasses amid homemade toffee breaks with the kids on NYE, , and the take-back of my life, culminated in me seeing Shakedown Street at the Little Bear, my first time out in 3 years. Albeit slow and small, I basked in the taste of what it was like, to come back to life.

I cried tears of gratitude, and I started to plan things. Maybe I could have friends again, maybe I could trail run again, maybe I could snowboard, or grow a garden again, maybe I could launch a business, maybe I could experience life with my kids. I started to dream of a future again, envisioning the 7-years of the destruction of our health and finances due to toxic mold poisoning in the rear-view.

But the day after a I posted my beacon of hope on Facebook, I blew my nose, a blood clot came out, and the vertigo, eye rash, nystagmus, convergence insufficiency, binocular vision, hearing loss, neck pain and dizziness came flooding back in an instant.

While I spun in bed, I did not allow myself to be leveled. I maintained my vision of reclamation. I held the conviction that I would solve the mystery. I used medical AI to vet the threads of my instincts, I felt the mysticism, and applied logic, and I followed breadcrumb to breadcrumb, along the golden brick road to the answers I was seeking.

In the hands of an osteopath, who found that my occiput and temporal bones were twisted inward, compressing my brain stem.

To Michael Hane, who found that I had Atlas (C1 vertebrae - how your skull connects to your spine) dislocation (likely from birth, made acute from the diving board accident), compressing vital veins and nerves, in an area called "The Mouth of God", the alleged meeting point between the physical and spiritual world - the Seat of the Soul, sending us on a road trip to have his treatment to re-set the Atlantoaxial joint, meeting him in Santa Fe.

Carrie Rose Koenig's Post

Finally, back to the discerning eye of Dr. Hepworth, the first Doctor ever who didn't scoff at me and try to put me on Prozac when I told him that my brain was swelling. Instead, he looked me square in the eyes and said, "I believe you, I know what this is, and I will not leave your side until we get you better."

On Wednesday this past week, as I lay on the bench at the Dr's office spinning, I learned that my instincts to insist on another CT were right, as it revealed a logical explanation for all these symptoms, and we reviewed the complex surgery that will give me my life back.

On March 10, I will lay on a cold steel table, under bright lights and the skill of an affable genius who will reconstruct me in a complex vein, skull and sinus surgery that carries risks of damage to cranial nerves, but when you're holding at 17 in Blackjack and you're set on a win, you ask the dealer to hit.

It's a complex procedure and many times, he is performing one, maybe two of these at one time, but he is a self-proclaimed instrument of the divine, and he is sure that I can handle all 4 of these at once:

Cranial CSF Leak Surgery:

I have holes in my skull (!!), that are allowing cerebrospinal fluid to leak into my eyes which is what is causing the vertigo, nystagmus and vision issues that have spun me right round', baby, right round' for 3 years! I suspected this in my research, which is why I insisted on a CT scan.

Jugular Vein De-Compression Surgery:

The jugular vein (like the Wu Tang Clan - also nothing to f*%k with), returns blood from the head to the heart, and mine is blocked on the right, which causes intracranial hypertension (horrible pressure headaches) as the blood builds with nowhere to go.

It also prevents toxic cerebrospinal fluid from leaving the brains detox (glymphatic) system, holding toxic CSF fluid against the brain, causing neuron death, brain fog and cognitive decline (that the "neurologist" assured me I could not possibly be experiencing).

In surgery, he will cut my neck open and run the length of the jugular vein to unblock anything preventing flow. He may have to shave my vertebrae, cut elongated styloid bones, remove diseased lymph nodes from the meningitis in my 20's, or untangle cranial nerves which can result in nerve impairment for up to a year impacting swallowing, talking, moving your face, head and arm, but when you have no quality of life, you make bets in perfect faith that God rewards bravery.

Sinus Surgery:

Structural issues are causing oxygen deprivation in the brain and are preventing drainage to boot requiring my Turbinates to be re-sectioned, and my septum to be corrected.

Eustachian Tube Balloon:

Due to all the pressure and fluid, my tube doesn't function which has disabled my vestibular system, so he will balloon it back open.

It's interesting looking back on my life, I can see how my body has been trying to show me these things for years – all symptoms of atlas misalignment and genetic inhibited detox pathways causing dysautonomia, PoTS, MCAS and hEDS and susceptibility to biotoxin illness.

-I was born with pigeon-feet, and had frequent strep throat on the right side, along with Mitral Valve prolapse due to hyper-mobility causing heart valve instability

-The 47- degree curve of my spine that required a 5-disc fusion when I was 15

-The 10+ years of stomach paralysis and the paralysis and removal of my gall bladder that mystified doctors, no one bothering to look at the function of the vagus nerve that runs digestion

-The genetics that hinder my ability to detox heavy metals (MTHFR) and disable my ability to detox biotoxins (HLA-DR genes), causing damage to the mitochondria, creating cell danger response and mast cell activation which degrades connective tissue.

As I recover from surgery, I will continue to construct my future by imagining that the best is yet to come:

-I will write my book (I've already started!)

-I will be running the trails of my backyard mountains this Summer, heart pumping, feet flying over Earth.

-I will be dancing to great music.

-I will launch a podcast, because boy, do I have some stories of magic to share.

-I will launch a coaching business leveraging all my executive experience and the wisdom I have gained in the dismantling, to walk others back to their power.

-I will find a group of friends who are on a path of personal development and authenticity and who love to explore this beautiful world, see great music, and have adventures.

-I will plug into my community and create relationships for myself and our kids.

It's funny because it's been there, all along. The head tilt, my right eye a bit higher than the left, the 60% hearing loss in my right ear, the digestive issues, the shortness of breath and the level 11 pain at the base of my skull.

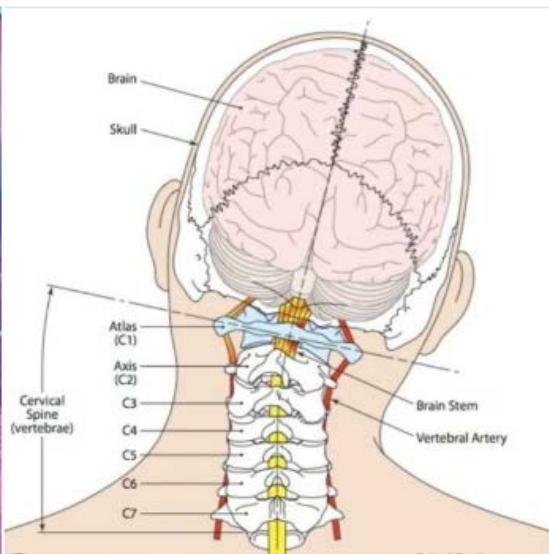

The signs whispering, from the functional neurologist who told me that I had some sort of blockage on the right and who noticed my misaligned eye - why I always watched tv with my head turned as a kid.

The naturopath who told me that a "tree fell in my river, blocking flow".

Even my own backyard, on the side of the mountain in Evergreen, a mirror to my internal landscape.

For years, runoff waters sprouted growth between the sandstone patio matrix, dirt covered the sinking corners of the pathway stones, muddy dog prints decorated our white hexagon kitchen tile floor, and rain always sent us into a tizzy, until we paid a landscaper to sculpt the land, channeling waters to where they should be, leaving a pristine, pressed cement patio, allowing our nervous systems a sign of relief.

My backyard, now perfect, no matter the weather, a premonition of what is to come. Let the landscaping commence.

I'm so sorry you are continuing to have issues, but I admire your determination, and know it will pay off in your healing process! I hope these are just bumps in the road, and you will be feeling better soon. Wishing you all the best Carrie! Hope to see you out there dancing again soon! ❤️

Wow! What a traumatic journey you have been on. I will continue to pray for you as I have in the past. God is good, and will guide you through this. Your children will forever be aware of what a strong, resilient and determined mother you are. It is so important to teach our kids to trust in and advocate for themselves, as you have done.

Melissa Koch Formby Thank you, Melissa and thank you for your prayers. Your words moved me deeply as I have felt like a failure to my kids. I used to be successful, active and fun but God has shown me that now I'm deeply present, with higher wisdom and empathy and that this, is the gift I get to give my kids. We are all so close from going through the thick of it the past 7 years and I am so grateful for it, even though it's been very hard.

Jess Ferrigno Thank you! Feel free to PM me as well but as a baseline, I would test your body for mycotoxins with a urine test and do a hair mineral analysis for heavy metals. So many symptoms these days are due to genetic inhibited detox pathways causing systemic toxicity (chemicals, mycotoxins, pesticides, metals).

I'd meet with a naturopath and also take this test to see if you have Chronic Inflammatory Response: www.VCSTest.com

Jess Ferrigno Also sharing this in case any of this resonates:

Toxicity though is such a huge component as it leaves the body in cell danger response with mitochondrial impact and affects all 11 systems of the body.

Also look into Atlas subluxation. So you could go to an Atlas Orthogonal chiropractor and they will take details x-rays of the craniocervical junction - atlas and axis. Or call Michael Hane who does a one-time re-seating of the atlas joint called Atlas Activation.

Atlas issues can cause mast cell activation which causes inflammation and connective tissue erosion, and dysautonomia which impacts the autonomic nervous system impacting breathing, digestion and heart.

Feel free to reach out any time. PS: I'm telling you, medical AI has given me so many answers.

Wow , prayers as you journey through this . As I am reading this , this is sounding so much like me . Here this last week actually really bad , the dizziness , the pressure headaches , feeling like my brain is swelling is the only way to explain it . I did and MRI a few years back would that have caught everything you are talking about it would it need to be a CT?

Neysha Moore Hi! Girl, this is intracranial hypertension from vascular compression. It could also be sinus as well. I had two ENT's tell me my sinuses were fine when I in fact had an insane infection in the sphenoid and all sorts of drainage issues that were creating sleep apnea!

See if you can come to Denver to see Dr Hepworth. He specializes in sinuses and these compressions along with cranial CSF leaks which could cause what you're describing too.

I had a jugular ultrasound with the Eagles Protocol to determine the compression. Basically, they measure it "normal" , then make you "bare down" and squeeze everything and then measure again as that creates inflammation.

The CT (I always refuse contrast) is what showed the sinus issues and the cranial leak.

I know way too much about this and I'm happy to help you in any way I can so always feel free to reach out. I'll post you a little video about jugular vein compression (which in an of itself can even cause cranial leaks).

Carrie Rose Koenig so and MRI wouldn't show this? I have had these feelings on and off for last few years but this last week or so has been bad, but I can also tell I am having a histamine flair up. Having bad air hunger and inflammed face with it. They want me to do a sleep apnea test as well. So sinuses could be causing all this by itself? I am constantly congested and last week been sneezing and nose and body itching. I have the mitral valve thing, MCAS (or think I do), POTS (self diagnosed again), and also think I have hEDS.

Neysha Moore

MRI can show a small portion of the sinus, just a bit of the sphenoid which is where I had fluid/infection.

Are you on good mast cell support? Ketotifen helps us a lot.

MCAS, hEDS and PoTS are all related and typically are rooted in things like Atlas dislocation which compresses the Vagus nerve causing dysautonomia resulting in the shortness of breath, PoTS and even MCAS.

Jugular compression can cause this as well which can be caused by elongated styloid bones that can be trimmed.

I would also test for mold, like stat if you haven't yet. The ERMI dust test is the way to go (happy to explain why I think that) and testing your urine for mycotoxins.

Carrie Rose Koenig so I did a long time ago and had mold toxicity and supposedly have lymes as well 😊 oh and SIBO, so I am just a mess... don't know which way to turn but this headaches, neck and upperback feeling so bound up and hurting and this dizziness and weird feeling in my head sucks.

For the sinuses, you really want a non-contrast CT scan and for Dr Hepworth in Colorado to read it if you can get in with him. He treats all the vascular stuff too but yes, sinuses can also cause sleep apnea.

I had 3 ENT Dr's tell me I had no problem with my sinuses when I had enlarged

*Post about health. "Two tales of the surgery I had 11 days ago, from the facts to a wander down a misty trail into the wooded enclave of meaning. . LEFT BRAIN - Surgery Synopsis: The surgical goal was to patch and clear drainage pathways to, from, and within the brain, to resolve vertigo, vision issues, headaches, brain fog, brain swelling and atrophy. -Right jugular vein was unblocked, restoring flow from 95% blocked at 1/8" to ¾" after being freed from calcified styloid bone and entangled lymph nodes. - 6 cerebrospinal fluid leaks in my skull of the sphenoid sinus were patched. -Sinus surgery corrected the deviated septum and enlarged turbinates. -Eustachian tubes ballooned opened. Recovery will take a full year with no walking, bending, lifting or twisting for up to 12 weeks. . RIGHT BRAIN - Mystical Tapestry of Poetry: Since surgery, I have been deep in what can only be called a ceremony. A baptism. A portal to a new way of being as God restores the flow of life force within. . The jugular vein is said to be a gateway to higher consciousness. The connection between our physical and spiritual bodies. A portal of expression of embodied inner truth. The incision in my neck revealing mine to be choked by 95% to 1/8", severing blood flow to my heart, trapping toxic CSF poisoning my brain, all while allegedly low-key subduing the actualization of my true expression, according to the mystics. . In reflection, I see that it became strangled 25 years ago, on my very first day of my first career job, when I cut off my long, strawberry-blonde hair, and traded my secret desire for something more, for a suit and heels - waking up with meningitis, spending my first week of my new career in the hospital. My brain swelled seemingly beyond the confines of my skull leaving 25+ years of hearing loss, pressure headaches, skull and neck pain to unfurl as the infected lymph nodes secretly tangled and crushed the flow of my life force. . On Monday, March 10, a self-proclaimed "instrument of the divine" genius surgeon who solved the riddle, set my jugular vein free. Untangled, unhindered, swelling immediately to ¾", free to flow to its full capacity, delivering blood and oxygen like a raging river to dry and barren tributaries, no more eddies of blood or cerebrospinal fluid (CSF) stagnating in my brain, the tree that fell and blocked my river, pulled out of the current. . During the sinus surgery to straighten the septum and re-section the turbinates, he also demystified the enigma of the vertigo that has spun me like a record for years. . My cerebrospinal fluid - the holy spirit water that runs through our beings like a river of life, protecting, cleansing and nourishing our brain and nervous systems - was discovered to be leaking through 6 holes in my skull into a deep cavern behind my eyes. . Since Summer 2022, spinal fluid bathed my optic nerve, creating wavy patterns in my vision. It seeped deep into my brainstem, warping my vestibular system, rocking me on a boat on solid ground. It eroded the caudate nucleus - the visual processing center of the brain, and it sent cranial nerves into seizure, bolting my eyes side-to-side, creating years of debilitating nystagmus and vertigo, my world spinning in a spiral of devolution. . The breach was not happenstance. The levee that broke, flooded a sacred enclave regarded as the "seat of the soul". A chrysalis housed in the butterfly-shaped sphenoid bone; a cavern thought to create the electromagnetic frequency that powers the pineal gland said to catalyze spiritual transformation, flooded with the anointing oil of God. . The vertigo swirled my outer vision, sent me to my back, spinning in bed, crying into God's embrace, but as I disintegrated in suspended animation, I was held, nourished, sculpted, transformed. Like a river that polishes jagged edges of rocks into smooth stones, God flowed into my inner vision, steeping me in His wisdom, restoring my ability to see beyond what my outer vision could comprehend. . "The eye is the lamp of the body. If your eyes are good, your whole body will be full of light." (Matthew 6:22). . This Spring, marks 7 years of the dissolution - the composting - of my family's life. God distilling and tilling us into nutrient dense soil from which new, more powerful life will form. . And as bright green buds begin to push through dark, damp, soil reaching for the light, a wellspring of hope and renewal springs forth from my soul, knowing that I am refined, purified, and on a path to recovery to be the beacon of love, service and inspiration that God designed me to be. I have a long road ahead as recovery can take a year and I may not see improvements even for 6 months and yet, I am thrilled that I'm on a new road with the potential for recovery. This painting called the Blessing by John Moseley feels like the perfect depiction of the past 3 years. You can buy it here if you love it as much as I do (It's on my birthday list this year).

It only took a few hours - I think 3 and yes, there is a venous outflow group where there is a community of people who are moving through this as well so it's a blessing to have support. I'd love to be in a documentary to bring awareness to these things. It's shocking that it's taken so many years to get to answers when my symptoms were text book. Thank you for your prayers ☺"

Two tales of the surgery I had 11 days ago, from the facts to a wander down a misty trail into the wooded enclave of meaning.

LEFT BRAIN - Surgery Synopsis:

The surgical goal was to patch and clear drainage pathways to, from, and within the brain, to resolve vertigo, vision issues, headaches, brain fog, brain swelling and atrophy.

-Right jugular vein was unblocked, restoring flow from 95% blocked at 1/8" to 3/4" after being freed from calcified styloid bone and entangled lymph nodes.

- 6 cerebrospinal fluid leaks in my skull of the sphenoid sinus were patched.

-Sinus surgery corrected the deviated septum and enlarged turbinates.

-Eustachian tubes ballooned opened.

Recovery will take a full year with no walking, bending, lifting or twisting for up to 12 weeks.

RIGHT BRAIN - Mystical Tapestry of Poetry:

Since surgery, I have been deep in what can only be called a ceremony. A baptism. A portal to a new way of being as God restores the flow of life force within.

The jugular vein is said to be a gateway to higher consciousness. The connection between our physical and spiritual bodies. A portal of expression of embodied inner truth. The incision in my neck revealing mine to be choked by 95% to 1/8", severing blood flow to my heart, trapping toxic CSF poisoning my brain, all while allegedly low-key subduing the actualization of my true expression, according to the mystics.

In reflection, I see that it became strangled 25 years ago, on my very first day of my first career job, when I cut off my long, strawberry-blonde hair, and traded my secret desire for something more, for a suit and heels - waking up with meningitis, spending my first week of my new career in the hospital. My brain swelled seemingly beyond the confines of my skull leaving 25+ years of hearing loss, pressure headaches, skull and neck pain to unfurl as the infected lymph nodes secretly tangled and crushed the flow of my life force.

Carrie Rose Koenig's Post

On Monday, March 10, a self-proclaimed "instrument of the divine" genius surgeon who solved the riddle, set my jugular vein free. Untangled, unhindered, swelling immediately to  $\frac{3}{4}$ ", free to flow to its full capacity, delivering blood and oxygen like a raging river to dry and barren tributaries, no more eddies of blood or cerebrospinal fluid (CSF) stagnating in my brain, the tree that fell and blocked my river, pulled out of the current.

During the sinus surgery to straighten the septum and re-section the turbinates, he also demystified the enigma of the vertigo that has spun me like a record for years.

My cerebrospinal fluid - the holy spirit water that runs through our beings like a river of life, protecting, cleansing and nourishing our brain and nervous systems - was discovered to be leaking through 6 holes in my skull into a deep cavern behind my eyes.

Since Summer 2022, spinal fluid bathed my optic nerve, creating wavy patterns in my vision. It seeped deep into my brainstem, warping my vestibular system, rocking me on a boat on solid ground. It eroded the caudate nucleus – the visual processing center of the brain, and it sent cranial nerves into seizure, bolting my eyes side-to-side, creating years of debilitating nystagmus and vertigo, my world spinning in a spiral of devolution.

The breach was not happenstance. The levee that broke, flooded a sacred enclave regarded as the "seat of the soul". A chrysalis housed in the butterfly-shaped sphenoid bone; a cavern thought to create the electromagnetic frequency that powers the pineal gland said to catalyze spiritual transformation, flooded with the anointing oil of God.

The vertigo swirled my outer vision, sent me to my back, spinning in bed, crying into God's embrace, but as I disintegrated in suspended animation, I was held, nourished, sculpted, transformed. Like a river that polishes jagged edges of rocks into smooth stones, God flowed into my inner vision, steeping me in His wisdom, restoring my ability to see beyond what my outer vision could comprehend.

"The eye is the lamp of the body. If your eyes are good, your whole body will be full of light."
(Matthew 6:22).

This Spring, marks 7 years of the dissolution – the composting - of my family's life. God distilling and tilling us into nutrient dense soil from which new, more powerful life will form.

Carrie Rose Koenig's Post

And as bright green buds begin to push through dark, damp, soil reaching for the light, a wellspring of hope and renewal springs forth from my soul, knowing that I am refined, purified, and on a path to recovery to be the beacon of love, service and inspiration that God designed me to be.

I have a long road ahead as recovery can take a year and I may not see improvements even for 6 months and yet, I am thrilled that I'm on a new road with the potential for recovery.

This painting called the Blessing by John Moseley feels like the perfect depiction of the past 3 years. You can buy it here if you love it as much as I do (It's on my birthday list this year).

We were awoken in the middle of the night with a freight train barreling toward us, honking its horn and we were SURE that we were dead. Turns out we parked only a few FEET from a trail track and it missed us by inches. Maybe just a prelude of what was to come.

Have you seen any docs regarding a parasite cleanse? I've done some deep diving into this and now wonder how our medical problems have to do with what we put in our bodies

GIRL. You must feel like a whole new woman, and that might be the understatement of the century. I know how much you've struggled for years and years trying to figure out just what was wrong with your body. 😊 but now you KNOW! I'm just shocked so many of these med pros didn't connect the dots to meningitis in your past and a potential for pathology in your structures. Your derivation of meaning is wonderful - spooky almost - about the significance and shape of the sphenoid....the pineal gland....beautiful allegory to your highest self's fullest potential ❤️ be well, stay well.

The River: 2 of 9

The river has nurtured my soul from the dawn of my origin. Alive, powerful and nourishing - dancing with divine surrender on its path to destiny - following a deep call to become one with the sea.
