"Life update! As I've been pretty MIA on this app lately. As some of you know, I got in a life altering freak accident about six months ago when 2x4x8 ft plank of wood fell three stories from a negligent construction site and hit me in the head. It gave me a pretty bad TBI (traumatic brain injury) amongst a ton of other issues, the most serious one being problems with my vision. So I decided to take this year off from markets and fairs, which I am SO bummed about. But I wanna do this recovery thing right.. cus Im pretty sure I only get one chance. Luckily I got a emergency medical grant from the @rauschenbergfoundation (which btw, is a great resource for artists!) So thank you Robert Rauschenberg! I will still be able to ship orders for personal and wholesale. So don't forget me! I'll be back someday when my brain is healthy and all beefed up again."

A month later, on 04/25/24, she wrote a post mentioning her Adderall prescription, writing, "So folks.. thanks to my brand new, handy dandy adderall prescription (commonly prescribed for a bad TBI).."

Please note that Subject frequently cross-posts between her social media accounts. Subject's X account has been inactive since 2013.

The Subject is pictured multiple times on associates' accounts after the DOI, mainly in photos with friends and some photos with the artwork. She is also tagged in many customers' posts after the DOI (pictures of her artwork). Additionally, Subject is mentioned in articles regarding her artwork, which are provided in the report for reference.

Danielle Arden O'Malley is an independent artist and designer based between Los Angeles and the Bay Area. Inspired by folklore, 90's cartoon's, femininity and the supernatural, her work weaves camp sensibilities, sugarcocated kitsch, and the odd & surreal into a weird and whimsical world of pastels, smut, fairytales and otherworldly creatures.

Her illustrations have been used to create a line of fabric designs, fashion accessories, art prints, greeting cards, home decor, jewelry, clothing and more.

Since graduating from the California College of Arts in 2010, she's painted murals and participated in exhibitions internationally. She utilizes printmaking, gouache, acrylic, collage and found objects to create paintings, shadowboxes, life size playhouses, zines and murals.

Danielle, what is Art for you?

Something that is essential for the survival of human beings.

Something that has existed for longer than these other abstract concepts that we deem more important and logical, such as government, the law, borders, money. And we cut funding for it, we don't give it to our children, we see it as an excess rather than a need.

The world needs art to survive, its what gives us our humanity. It what helps us see the humanity in the 'other'.

Prior to the DOI: Hii lovers. I just want to say, I've never had a smart phone in my life (still holding onto the flip phone) and I currently have to use my boyfriend's phone to post things on here. I often didn't have the internet at my dad's house in high school and social media/smart phones really took hold when I was in my early twenties. I'm grateful I grew up in a pre social media world and I'm still trying to create a reality for myself without all the chaos and overstimulation. I guess I'm a Luddite and I probably wouldn't have social media if I didn't need it for work. I took a long absence this summer and now I'm back and trying to be mindful of how I use this thing because it will give me literal panic attacks and really affect my perception of reality. I'll always be answering my DMs though even if it seems I'm MIA. Love to you all ☺

STORIES & INSIGHTS MARCH 13, 2023

Share This Article

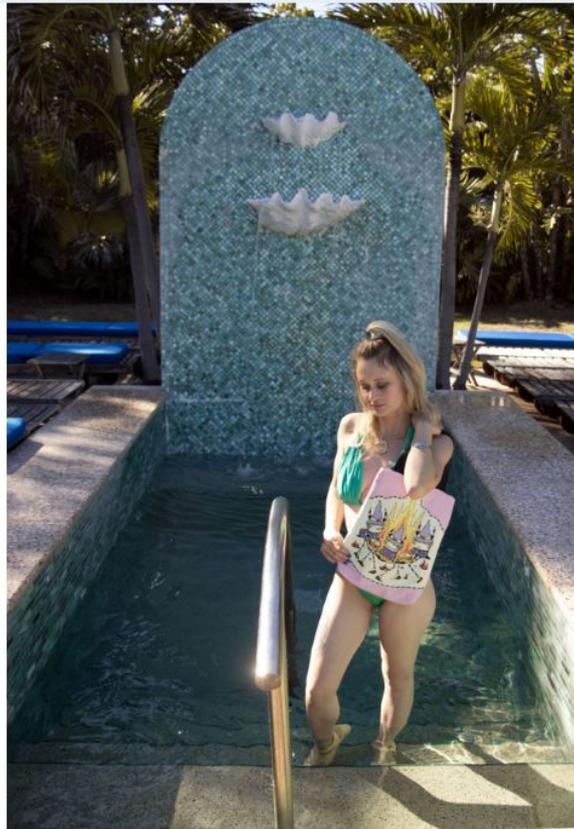

We're excited to introduce you to the always interesting and insightful Danielle O'Malley . We hope you'll enjoy our conversation with Danielle below.

Alright, Danielle thanks for taking the time to share your stories and insights with us today. To kick things off, we'd love to hear about things you or your brand do that diverge from the industry standard

I've recently been entering the more industry aspect of the art and illustration world. I've been learning all the things the Artist brain does not enjoy, like copyright law and licensing contracts. I'd say what I've done different is really try to ignore industry trends to create a style new and specific to me. I think it's hard being an artist or illustrator, to want instant satisfaction with every piece and to go off on a tandem, following hallow trends or comparing yourself to other people's success and work. Sometimes you just have to step away (especially from technology) to sit with yourself and your unique voice and find your very own specific creativity.

Danielle , love having you share your insights with us. Before we ask you more questions, maybe you can take a moment to introduce yourself to our readers who might have missed our earlier conversations?

Danielle , love having you share your insights with us. Before we ask you more questions, maybe you can take a moment to introduce yourself to our readers who might have missed our earlier conversations?

My name is Danielle Arden O'Malley. I'm an independent illustrator, Artist and designer based between Los Angeles and the Bay Area. Inspired by folklore, 90's cartoon's, femininity and the supernatural, my work weaves camp sensibilities, sugarcoated kitsch, and the odd & surreal into a weird and whimsical world of pastels, fairytales and otherworldly creatures. My illustrations have been used to create fabric designs & accessories, art prints, greeting cards, home decor, jewelry and clothing.

I've been drawing and crafting since I was a child, and graduated from the California College of the Arts in 2011. Since then, I've painted murals and exhibited artwork throughout the globe. I've slowly developed a line of products over the past 15 years that I sell at markets, as wholesale and on e-commerce sites. I also get commissions for illustrative work, from clients ranging from tiny bakeries in San Francisco to the Oakland A's.

Learning and unlearning are both critical parts of growth – can you share a story of a time when you had to unlearn a lesson?

I've had to unlearn what success is and that when it comes, it's usually a lot simpler and more mundane than you've imagined. It also comes in very unexpected places, so you have to be really open and willing to grow in all sorts of directions. I think there's a perception of a timeline when it comes to business or careers. Like you go to college, then maybe get a masters or internship, and climb the ladder. In reality, business and an art career is wild with constant ups and downs and you're never actually following a set path.

Can you talk to us about manufacturing? How'd you figure it all out? We'd love to hear the story.

It's a constant process, keeping up with manufacturing, vendors and whatnot. Right now, I design and manufacture all of my own products in my studio, while sourcing materials like fine art paper, raw materials and printed fabric from other manufacturers. Since I'm a small independent artist and designer, it's important to me to have my hand in each product. However, it is hard and takes a lot of time and sometimes the price point isn't enough. As a designer, whenever I create a new product there are so many things to think about beyond the product. The packaging of it, how it will look on a store shelf, how to ship it through e-commerce, it's price point versus wholesale and retail. Sometime's I'll roll out too many products at once without thinking through all those minute details, and that will cost you in the end!

Prior to the DOI: Thanks to everyone who stopped by my @surtexshow booth. I took a huge leap by signing up to do this show and hoping for the best. I had a heavy gut wrenching death while getting ready for it, and also after months of planning, I messed up my booth size so all my measurements were totally screwed. ☹️ But somehow I finished it, and I'm so happy I did. During my 20s, i had a huge phobia of commitment & I would just skip town every time something bad happened. Very proud of myself that I stuck something through no matter what life threw at me. ☺️ Shoutout to @boothawanda who is a literal fairy godmother of illustration trade shows. Excited for what the future holds ♥️ . Ps Message me if you want a pillow. I'm leaving the country soon and I need to get rid of these babies!

danielleomalleey This year was totally insane. I traveled to the Florida keys, to Puerto Rico, to nyc then Istanbul and Kenya. I survived my first art trade show and survived my first near death experience/freak accident. I lost my best childhood friend/sister way too young to an overdose and also lost my grandmother. It was simultaneously one of the best and worst years of my life. But such is life. It's simultaneously suffering, then a wonder and a beauty that it even exists at all.

Hope you all have a wonderful new year. Party hard, (and safe!) with the people you love. 🥳❤️

After the DOI. This past year was insane. I went from the florida keys, to puerto rico.. from nyc, to istanbul, to mombasa kenya. I did everything from branch out into art licensing at my first big trade show, to survive a serious freak accident that should have killed me. I created a ton of comissions, illustrations and handmade products. I lost my childhood best friend to a fetanyl overdose and my grandmother. I had another wonderful year with my two soulmates (one man one dog). Life is a wild ride . #goodbye2023 #newyear #hello2024 #2023 #2023recap #happynewyear #happynewyear2023 #goodbye2023welcome2024 #2024 #recap #bye2023 #yearinreview #endoftheyear #recap2023 #newyear2024 #hello2024 #goodbye2023welcome2024 #happynewyear2024 #thankyou2023

After the DOI: Five day trip to Vegas for @designercon! This is the first real time I've spent in Vegas since I was a little kid (my grandparents lived here when I was growing up). Circus circus is quite different as an adult let me tell you.. . It was nice to see so many new and old faces at designercon. I even saw childhood friends I hadn't seen in 15 years! And at one point there was a massive crowd screaming and running from one end of the expo center to the other, and I guess even travis scott made an appearance ☐ holy mackerel . Anyways, I won five bucks then lost 10. I got trapped inside the Vegas strip for a full hour and was late to work. I went to the flamingo wedding chapel where my parents got married in the 80s. if you ever head to Vegas, i recommend @theneonmuseumlasvegas and this weird old little vintage derby game from the 80s in @thedlasvegas I highly advise against staying at circus circus ☐☐☐

Subject's profile on the Kaleidoscope Art Festival vendor page.

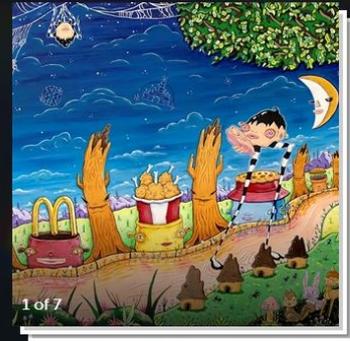

Inspired by folklore, '90s cartoons, femininity, and the supernatural, Danielle O'Malley creates a weird and whimsical world through her artwork. Her pieces blend camp sensibilities, sugarcoated kitsch, and surrealism, using gouache, acrylic, and cartoonist techniques to craft a fantastical parallel universe that mirrors and reimagines our own. Drawing on childhood nostalgia, adult humor, and existential themes, her work explores complex emotions related to life, death, spirituality, gender, and our shared humanity. From dioramas and mixed media paintings to life-size playhouses and fabric designs, Danielle's creations bring this imaginative world to life. Each piece is lovingly handmade in her LA studio and can be found through ecommerce, wholesale, and at art fairs across the country.

Caption: Indie home decor: House Accent Pillow From children's baby book to cozy pillow ! ☺☺ This anthropomorphic cartoon house originally a gouache illustration I painted for a children's ABC board book. She's now printed and sewn into a playful, maximalist art pillow. I love how the mint green and coral red color palette gives it a retro feel, and the minky fabric on the front makes it as soft as a babies blanket. The backside of the pillow is made from recycled upholstery fabrics. i'm lovin' how these gals vibe with other colorful accent pieces from across the room, making certain colors pop ☺☺ #handmadehomedecor #whimsicaldecor #throwpillows #uniquehomedecor #maximalistdecor

I never thought I'd live here but I totally fell in love with the city and I regret not moving here long ago. I felt like I fit right in and everyday I strike up a conversation with total strangers like we are old friends. What I love most is amidst all the urban sprawl there are millions of tiny little cultural secrets hidden everywhere.

I've never been more judged for living in a place than Los Angeles. I'll tell random people who live thousands of miles away that I live in LA, and they'll sneer, say something stupid & condescending or just simply say 'I'm sorry.' I know they don't know shit about Los Angeles and I know right away I don't like them.

Rabbits, a David Lynch web series, was used in a psychological study to investigate the effects of acetaminophen on existential crisis. The study's paper, titled "The Common Pain of Surrealism and Death", suggested that acetaminophen may suppress the desire to affirm meaning systems.

Explanation

Rabbits is a disturbing and disorienting series that features demonic voices, mysterious phone calls, and hallucinatory movements. The study used the series as a stimulus to investigate how acetaminophen affects existential crisis. The study's findings suggest that the brain processes physical and emotional pain in

The Common Pain of Surrealism and Death: Acetaminophen Reduces Compensatory Affirmation Following Meaning Threats

Daniel Randles, Steven J. Heine, and Nathan Santos
University of British Columbia

Abstract
The meaning-maintenance model posits that any violation of expectations leads to an affective experience that motivates compensatory affirmation. We explore whether the neural mechanism that responds to meaning threats can be inhibited by acetaminophen, in the same way that acetaminophen inhibits physical pain or the distress caused by social rejection. In two studies, participants received either acetaminophen or a placebo and were provided with either an unsettling experience or a control experience. In Study 1, participants wrote about either their death or a control topic. In Study 2, participants watched either a surrealist film clip or a control film clip. In both studies, participants in the meaning-threat condition who had taken a placebo showed typical compensatory affirmations by becoming more punitive toward lawbreakers, whereas those who had taken acetaminophen, and those in the control conditions, did not.

It does not take long after the opening credits of a David Lynch film for the viewer to sense that something is awry. Whether because of nonlinear dream imagery, the unsettling juxtaposition of the beautiful alongside the horrifying, or the surreal disconnect between the events and characters' reactions, Lynch's films have the ability to "disrupt, offend or mystify" (Rodley, 2005, p. 245). Insofar as it "hurts" to watch some of Lynch's films, as it arguably hurts whenever one is assaulted by thoughts and experiences that are at odds with one's expectations and values, the question arises as to how this uncomfortable feeling is represented in the brain. In this article, we explore the common foundation that underlies people's reactions to various kinds of events that cause anxiety, unease, and pain.

The meaning-maintenance model (MMM) proposes that domain-general arousal is triggered by any experience that is surprising, confusing, or in violation of expectations (Heine, Proulx, & Volo, 2006). In this article, we extend recent work on the common neural pathway for physical and social pain, suggesting that any unexpected event, not just events with a physical or social component, produces the same initial neural and subjective experience of distress. On this basis, we argue that acetaminophen, which has been shown to reduce both physical and social pain, will also prevent typical meaning-maintenance responses.

Pain and Rejection
Physical pain and social rejection share a neural process and subjective component that are experienced as distress (Eisenberger & Lieberman, 2004; MacDonald & Leary, 2005). Although there are experiences unique to each type of event, such as the sensory awareness of specific pain, there are many subjective and neurological similarities that lead to the same general felt unpleasantness (Price, 2000). For instance, there is evidence that
